NEAR the close of July, 1861, Henry R. Guss, a citizen of West Chester, who had commanded a company in the Ninth Regiment of the three months' service, received authority from the Secretary of War to recruit a regiment for three years. Enrolling was immediately commenced, and in two months' time its ranks were full. Companies D and I were principally from Delaware county. The remaining companies were from the county of Chester. A large proportion of officers and men had served in the three months' campaign, and militia organizations. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Wayne, near the borough of West Chester, where an organization was effected by the selection of the following field officers: Henry R. Guss, Colonel; Augustus P. Duer, Lieutenant Colonel; Galusha Pennypacker, Major. Clothing, arms, and equipments were furnished from the arsenal in Philadelphia, and the drill and discipline of the command was commenced. An excellent Band, consisting of twenty-two members, was attached to it. A school for commissioned officers, conducted by Colonel Guss, was established, and also one for non-commissioned officers, conducted by line officers. The citizens of Chester county contributed freely of whatever could add to the health and comfort of the men. On the 12th of November, Governor Curtin, accompanied by his staff, visited the camp, and presented the State colors in presence of a great concourse of citizens, delivering an eloquent address, which was responded to by Adjutant H. W. Carruthers, in behalf the regiment.

On the 12th of November the command broke camp and proceeded to Washington, and upon its arrival went into camp a half mile north of the Capitol. After remaining here a week, in the meantime receiving new Springfield rifled muskets in exchange for the smooth-bore which had originally been given, it proceeded via Baltimore to Fortress Monroe, and went into camp near the ruins of the village of Hampton. It was soon after ordered to Port Royal, South Carolina, and embarking upon the steamer Errickson on the 8th of December, arrived at the entrance of the harbor on the 11th; but a storm arising, it was obliged again to put to sea, and for three days, was buffeted by winds and waves, the men suffering from sea-sickness, and from the crowded condition of the steamer. Upon landing it was hospitably received by the Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania, which had preceded it, and marked the beginning of that close intimacy between the two regiments, which continued to the end of their terms of service.

On the 21st of January, a brigade, consisting of the Sixth Connecticut, Fourth New Hampshire, Ninth Maine, and the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, under command of General H. G. Wright, embarked on transports, accompanied with gunboats, for an expedition to Warsaw Sound, Georgia, thirteen miles from Savannah, designed as a diversion in favor of troops secretly operating for the capture of Fort Pulaski. Heavy guns were landed on a low marshy island, and taken across it by a road which had been constructed in the night time, and brought within a few hundred yards of the fort, without attracting the attention of the enemy. The commandant was summoned to surrender, but not complying, the guns were opened, and so persuasive did one day's bombardment prove, that on the following morning a white flag was displayed, and the fort was delivered up with its garrison and armament. On the 9th of February the troops at Warsaw landed, and remained in camp until the 19th, when they again embarked, and on the 28th, the fleet, consisting of thirty-one vessels, twenty-six of which were gunboats, proceeded to St. Mary's River, the transports anchoring off the old town of Fernandina. On the 5th of March the Ninety-seventh landed and possessed the town, the enemy having abandoned it, together with Fort Church and other surrounding places. On the 9th company A, with a detachment of cavalry, made a scout to Harrison's Landing, but found no enemy. On the 24th the regiment proceeded to Jacksonville to reinforce the troops already there, and were busily employed in throwing up fortifications and in repelling occasional attacks.

In March, General Hunter relieved General Sherman in command of the Department, and at once ordered the evacuation of Florida. The regiment, accordingly, embarked with General Wright's command, and returned to Hilton Head.

On the 19th of April it again struck tents and proceeded to North Edisto Island, where it was engaged in fatigue and guard duty until the beginning of June, when it crossed the Edisto with General Wright's command, and moved across John's Island to Legareville. With a squadron of cavalry it made a reconnoissance on the island on the 7th of June, and encountered a body of the enemy which was driven, taking some prisoners, and losing two wounded. Under cover of the gunboats, the troops commenced crossing the Stono River to James' Island on the following day. Two companies of the Ninety-seventh, G and H, under Lieutenant Colonel Duer, were left to occupy Legareville, the rest of the regiment encamping with Wright's Division in front of Secessionville, where the enemy was intrenched. On the evening of the 10th the pickets of the Forty-seventh New York, the Forty-fifth and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, were attacked. Colonel Guss, who was in command of the picket line, promptly moved up with his reserve, and by great personal bravery succeeded in steadying his wavering force, and in holding the ground until a battery was brought into position, and the gunboats opened with their huge shells, when the enemy was driven back, leaving seventeen dead upon the field and eight wounded, who fell into the hands of the victors, reporting that many of their dead and wounded had been carried off. The loss in the Ninety-seventh was three killed and eleven wounded. In the battle of Secessionville, which was fought on the 16th of June, the regiment was much exposed and held its position with unflinching bravery; but fortunately escaped with only small loss. Engaged in picket and fatigue duty, and in the actions of the 10th and 16th of June, it remained upon the island until July 1st, when it returned with the Sixth Connecticut to North Edisto, and soon after to Hilton Head, Colonel Guss being assigned to the command of the post.

At the beginning of September the regiment was detailed for duty on Broad River, and was distributed as follows: Companies A, F and I, under command of Major Pennypacker, at Seabrook Point; B, G and K, under Lieutenant Colonel Duer, at Stoney's Plantation; H and E, at Drayton's Plantation; C and D, under Captain Price, at Spanish Mills. A week later the regiment was relieved and returned to camp, when a handsome sword and sash, in acknowledgment of his worth, was presented to Colonel Guss by the line officers. In September fevers prevailed to an alarming extent, so much so that all drill and unnecessary labor was dispensed with. By the middle of October there were five hundred cases of intermittent fever, and frequent cases of yellow fever, many of which proved fatal. Every precaution was taken to improve the sanitary condition of the camp, but to little purpose. On the 20th of November the regiment, with the exception of company C, was removed to St. Helena Island, where the health of the men rapidly improved.

Early in April, 1863, the second expedition against Charleston left Hilton Head. The First Brigade, First Division, Tenth Corps, consisted of the Eighth Maine, and Seventy-sixth and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, and was under command of Colonel Guss. It landed at Folly Island, where it remained during the bombardment of Sumter. The attack not proving successful the fleet drew off, and the land forces again returned to Hilton Head. On the 21st of April the Ninety-seventh was detached from the First, and ordered to the Third Brigade, commanded by General T. G. Stevenson, then occupying Seabrook Island.

About the middle of June General Gilmore assumed command of the Department, and at once began preparations for active operations against the approaches to Charleston. Terry's Division, the First, was sent to James' Island for a diversion, where, on the 16th of July, the enemy made a spirited attack, but was signally repulsed. Abandoning James' Island, Terry proceeded to Folly Island, where he landed, and marching up to Light House Inlet, passed over, and joined the forces which had already effected a lodgment upon Morris Island. Forts Wagner and Gregg, upon the upper end of the island, covering Sumter, were held by the enemy. General Gilmore determined to carry Wagner by assault. General Strong's Brigade, supported by Putnam's, formed the storming party, while Stevenson's Brigade, to which the Ninety-seventh belonged, was held in readiness to advance in case the assault proved successful. At dusk the order to advance was given, and the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts (colored) leading the way, the assaulting column moved forward. A fierce fire of artillery was poured upon it as it advanced, and on reaching the fort a deadly storm from small arms. Without faltering it passed the obstructions, and gained the slopes of the works; but here the slaughter was appalling; and the remnant, unhurt, recoiled and turned back. Putnam's Brigade followed, but shared a like fate. Stevenson's Brigade was ordered forward but was almost immediately re-called, the failure of the assault being but too apparent. Two companies, A and F, under Lieutenant Colonel Duer, were ordered to the abattis on the beach, whence they were to advance as skirmishers, as near to the fort as possible, and cover the parties detailed to pick up the wounded. Companies C, D, E and I, under Captain Price, were ordered to stack arms and proceed upon this latter duty, in which they were engaged during the entire night. General Stevenson remained upon the ground until the last, superintending in person the removal, manifesting the greatest anxiety that no colored soldier should be left to fall into the hands of the enemy, saying to the officer in command, "You know how much harder they will fare at the hands of the enemy than white men."

The search was pushed to the moat and slopes of the fort, the men crawling, prostrate upon the ground, under cover of darkness, listening as they went for the groans of the wounded, and when found, dragging them away to a point where they could be taken up and carried back. At daylight these companies, with the two on the skirmish line, were relieved, and joining the rest of the regiment, went to the rear, where they were established in camp. The siege of Fort Wagner by regular approaches now commenced, in which the regiment participated, furnishing regular details for fatigue and guard duty, losing some men almost daily from the enemy's missiles, but more from sickness caused by fatigue and exposure. The seventh and last parallel was at length completed, and on the evening of the 6th of September, the commanders of regiments were summoned to General Terry's headquarters, to receive their instructions, preparatory to making an assault on the following morning. During the night a rumor was circulated that the enemy had evacuated his works, and two men who volunteered to enter them, found them abandoned.

The forts were immediately occupied, and the engineers were set to work to change their fronts. Fatigue parties were regularly detailed, and under a continuous fire from the surrounding forts, labored incessantly until the works were completed, and the heavy siege guns were mounted, bearing upon Sumter.

On the 2d of October the regiment was ordered to Fernandina, Florida, to garrison that fort, and the works at Fort Clinch. Early in October, two hundred and fifteen conscripts were added to the regiment, some of whom proved good soldiers, but many worthless and troublesome. On the 9th of February, 1864, a detachment of the regiment, consisting of two hundred and ninety men, under Major Pennypacker, crossing the river, moved up with the design of attacking the enemy at Camp Cooper, near Baldwin Station, on the Florida Railroad, fourteen miles distant. Cautiously approaching, the proper dispositions were made, and a charge ordered; but the camp was found unoccupied, and the command returned by the same route to Fernandina, Major Pennypacker having communicated to a company upon a gunboat, which had run up the river for a co-operative demonstration, the result of the expedition. A week later Major Pennypacker with three hundred men was sent to the Woodstock and King's Ferry Mills, on the St. Mary's River, to secure lumber and mill-fixtures for use in the Department. The Naval Schooner Para accompanied the party as an escort. Several transports were loaded with lumber and rafts prepared for floating down the river, in the meantime keeping the enemy at bay, who made his appearance on the opposite shore. On the 22d Major Pennypacker was ordered to return with all possible dispatch, the engagement at Olustee having proved disastrous to our arms. Subsequently a reconnoissance was made up the St. Mary's, on the steamer Island City, with company F, under Captain Lewis, in which the enemy's pickets were encountered and driven, and some rebel property and machinery captured.

On the 16th of March three hundred and thirty-seven of the regiment reenlisted, and departed for home on veteran furlough, under command of Captain Mendenhall. They were accompanied by Colonel Guss and Adjutant Carruthers, their first absence since taking the field. On the 3d of April Lieutenant Colonel Duer, who had for some time been suffering from disease contracted in the service, resigned, and Major Pennypacker was promoted to succeed him, assuming command of the regiment. Captain Price was promoted to Major. On the 23d of April, the Ninety-seventh having been relieved at Fernandina by the One Hundred and Fifty-seventh New York, was ordered to Hilton Head, where, upon its arrival, it joined the Tenth Corps in its movement to Fortress Monroe to reinforce the army of the James under General Butler. At Gloucester Point, where Butler's forces were being prepared for an active campaign, the Tenth Corps was re-organized, the Ninety-seventh being assigned to the First Brigade, Third Division, composed of the Fifty-fifth and Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania, Fourth New Hampshire, and the Eighth and Ninth Maine, commanded by Colonel Richard White of the Fifty-fifth, General Ames commanding the division, and General Gilmore the corps.

Moving up the James with his army, Butler landed on the 7th of May at Bermuda Hundred, and marched over towards the Richmond and Petersburg Railroad, halting at Foster's Plantation, where a line of earthworks was thrown up. This was subsequently extended from the James above, to the swamps and tide waters of the Appomattox below. On the 9th Generals Gilmore and Brooks advanced upon the railroad, and the Ninety-seventh was sent forward to tear up the track and cut the wires of the telegraph. This work was effectually accomplished, the enemy's cavalry watching the operations at a distance, but not attempting to interfere in the work. On the afternoon of the 9th the regiment took part in the action at Swift Creek, near Petersburg, and early on the morning of the 10th was ordered to support General Terry in his movement upon Richmond, being subsequently engaged in the action at Drury's Bluff. Soon afterwards Colonel Guss and the veterans returned, the Colonel being assigned to the command of the brigade.

On the morning of May 16th Beauregard, in command of the rebel forces, having concentrated his troops, attacked at daylight, under cover of a heavy fog, striking the right wing. The Ninety-seventh was at the time on duty at General Butler's headquarters. It was immediately ordered to join the Thirteenth Indiana, and to take position at the Wier Bottom Church Road, and hold the enemy in check on that side until the forces on the left could be withdrawn. As soon as the line was formed, company F was thrown forward as skirmishers. At two P. M. the enemy opened with artillery, his infantry being in force in front, but was held steadily in check by these two regiments. At dusk they withdrew to the intrenchments. The loss was two wounded and five captured.

On the morning of the 18th, General Beauregard's forces having advanced to within a short distance of the picket line, assaulted a portion of it near Green Plain, from which the pickets of the Eighth Maine were driven. At eight A. M. the Ninety-seventh was ordered to the front to re-take it. Four companies were deployed by Lieutenant Colonel Pennypacker, and advanced under his command in a skirmish line, supported by the rest of the regiment under Major Price. In the face of a hot fire of musketry, the command advanced, routing the enemy and occupying his line. An uninterrupted fire of musketry was kept up on both sides during the rest of the day. At ten P. M. the regiment was relieved. In this daring charge the regiment lost nineteen killed and thirty-eight wounded. Among the latter were Captains Francis M. Guss and Samuel V. Black, and Lieutenant Abel Griffith.

On the evening of the 19th of May, one hundred and fifty men, comprising companies A, B, C and E, were detailed for picket duty, under command of Major Price, to occupy the same line held on the previous evening. Soon after getting into the rifle-pits, the enemy charged, but was repulsed with considerable loss. Twice during the night, the enemy attempted to drive in the left of the Ninety-seventh and the right of the Ninth Maine, but was as often driven by the steady fire of our well trained marksmen. He could be distinctly heard moving his artillery and giving his orders, evidently massing for a determined attack. This was reported to the officer in command, and reinforcements asked for, but none came. Picks and shovels were distributed, and the works strengthened, the men working industriously all night. During the morning a fog prevailed, preventing satisfactory observations; but when it lifted, a rebel earth-work on a knoll in front, with embrasures for three guns, less than a mile distant was revealed, and a heavy force of infantry, as subsequently ascertained, Pickett's whole division. His skirmishers were several times advanced, evidently to develope the strength in his front. The little puffs of blue smoke at regular intervals of three paces, the intervals at which Price was obliged to distribute his men, but too plainly disclosed its weakness. The peril of the position without reinforcements, and without the prospect of having any, was made painfully manifest as three rebel regiments, with banners flying, marched out, en echelon, to the right, across the front, and the rebel batteries opened. When the rebel infantry had reached a piece of wood opposite the left, it suddenly veered, and with a yell charged the Ninth Maine, holding that part of the line, driving it back in confusion. A gap was thus opened through which the enemy poured, and having gained the shelter of the abandoned works, opened a galling flank fire upon the Ninety-seventh. Just then the Thirteenth Indiana, in three skirmish lines, came up for support, but was subjected to so severe a fire that nearly the entire force was either killed or wounded. Outflanked and confronted by overwhelming odds, Major Price severely wounded, the only alternatives were, retreat under a fire that was almost certain destruction, or surrender. The former was chosen, and the fragment of the command remaining, made its escape as best it could.

When it was realized at headquarters that a part of the line had been lost, Lieutenant Colonel Pennypacker, with about three hundred of the regiment that had not been on duty in the morning, was ordered to advance and recapture it. The command was promptly formed, and with a regular and unwavering front, went forward under a murderous fire of grape and canister, and musketry, until the leader had been thrice wounded, and half had fallen, when, the hopelessness of the attempt being apparent, the order to retire was given. The loss in this heroic but fruitless charge, was three officers and forty-four men killed, eight officers and one hundred and twenty-one men wounded, and twelve taken prisoners, an aggregate of one hundred and eighty-eight.

On the 27th, in obedience to the orders from General Grant, the Eighteenth Corps, and a part of the Tenth Corps, were dispatched to White House in transports, and thence marched to form junction with the army in front of Cold Harbor. The position of the Ninety-seventh, from the time of its arrival until its return on the 12th of June, was at the front constantly, where it well maintained its character for courage and efficiency, sustaining a loss of one killed and nine wounded.

Returning again to the south side of the James, at a point two and a-half miles from Petersburg, it came upon the enemy's entrenched line. Just before sunset of the 15th, the Eighteenth Corps and the Second Division of the Tenth, charged and captured the enemy's works, taking four hundred prisoners and sixteen pieces of artillery. The position of the Ninety-seventh was in the second line of works, and during the night it was busily employed in entrenching. On the following day another general advance was made, in which a second line of the enemy's works was captured. Shortly afterwards the Second Division, which had been serving with the Eighteenth Corps, returned to Bermuda Hundred, and re-joined the Tenth at the entrenchments near Foster's Plantation. On the 22d Colonel Guss resigned, and Lieutenant Colonel Pennypacker was promoted to succeed him, the latter being prevented by wounds from joining the regiment for several weeks, the command in the meantime devolving on Major Price. On the evening of the following day, the Tenth Corps was again ordered to the front before Petersburg, the Ninety-seventh taking position in front of Cemetery Hill, where it was kept constantly engaged, losing men almost daily.

On the 30th one hundred men from the Ninety-seventh, and three hundred from other regiments, all under command of Captain Mendenhall, were ordered to advance upon the enemy's works in front of the Cemetery to engage the attention of the enemy, while a stronger force, under Colonel Barton of the Forty-eighth New York, made a real assault. Moving rapidly over meadow, ravine, and wood, Mendenhall boldly charged across an open field, and gained the works whence a rapid fire was opened, which was vigorously returned. In the meantime Barton's forces failed to move, and the situation of this small detachment, on which the enemy was left free to concentrate his forces, was critical. But the ground was resolutely held until nightfall, when it was re-called, one hundred and fifty of the four hundred having fallen. The loss in the regiment was five killed and sixteen wounded.

For nearly six weeks after this affair, the division continued to occupy the trenches between the City Point and the Norfolk and Petersburg railroads. Upon the occasion of the explosion of the mine, on the 30th of July, it was brought up and formed in rear of the batteries bearing on the rebel works, and when the assaulting column had gone forward, was ordered to advance in support. But the distance to pass over was so great, and so many obstructions were met by the way, that before it could reach the works to be taken, the enemy had recovered from his panic, and was opening with his artillery right and left, and bringing up reserves of infantry. Nevertheless the command moved steadily on, and captured and held a portion of the enemy's works. While the Ninety-seventh was moving, a staff officer succeeded in detaching the five companies on the left, by ordering the Lieutenant in command of the leading company, marching by the left flank, to turn aside. These companies, Captain G. W. Hawkins in command, were ordered to charge a line of rifle-pits, which was successfully executed. Subsequently Major Price, who commanded the regiment, attempted to move this detachment so as to unite the two wings, but was prevented by a sudden attack, and it remained apart until the close of the action. The mine had been successfully exploded, and never had troops displayed greater valor, but it was found impossible to hold the advantage gained, and the forces were withdrawn, not without serious loss. The Ninety-seventh was relieved at half past two P. M., and with the division retired to its position in front of the Cemetery. Its loss was ten killed, and twenty-eight wounded. Captain Mendenhall and Lieutenant Levi L. Marsh were among the wounded, the latter mortally.

On the 13th of August, Colonel Pennypacker having measureably recovered from his wounds of May 28th, returned and assumed command, and immediately thereafter the regiment moved with the corps across the James, where it participated in the capture of the intrenchments at Deep Bottom on the morning of the 15th, and in the action at Strawberry Plains, on the 16th, wherein the enemy was driven from his works, but subsequently recovered them by a flank movement, and inflicted severe loss, the Ninety-seventh losing ten killed, eleven wounded, and eighteen captured. Among the killed was the former Adjutant, Captain Henry W. Carruthers, and among the prisoners, Captain Samuel V. Black. On the 20th the corps returned to its old position at Bermuda Hundred, where, on the morning of the 25th, as it was being relieved at the front, the enemy made a furious attack, and captured a part of the line. In the evening of that day, it was re-captured by the Second Division, in which the regiment lost two killed and three wounded. Towards the close of August the corps returned to the Petersburg front, occupying the lines from the Appomattox to Cemetery Hill, and soon afterwards Colonel Pennypacker was assigned to the command of the Second Brigade, Second Division, composed of the Forty-seventh and forty-eighth New York, Seventy-sixth, Ninety-seventh, and Two Hundred and Third Pennsylvania, the command of the regiment devolving at intervals, in the absence of Major Price, on account of sickness, on Captains Lewis and Hawkins, and Lieutenant Wainwright.

On the 28th of September, having crossed to the north bank of the James, the Tenth Corps, simultaneously with the attack on Fort Harrison, attacked the enemy's works on New Market Heights, and captured them. Advancing, it assaulted the rebel Fort Gilmore, but found that work too strong to be taken with the weakened force in hand. Colonel Pennypacker led his brigade on the right of the assaulting column, and was obliged to pass over nearly a mile of slashings, and a small stream, the ground proving unfavorable for rapid moment. The loss in the Ninety-seventh was ten wounded and two missing; among the wounded was Colonel Pennypacker, and Lieutenants Gosgriff and Duffee. The regiment was led by Lieutenant Wainwright, who, with Lieutenant Eves, was commended in orders by General Butler. Not relishing the proximity which the Union forces had attained, the rebel commander sent a heavy force under Fields and Hoke to turn the right flank of the army and force it back. The cavalry of Kautz, occupying an advanced position, was encountered and driven; but coming upon the Tenth Corps they found it ready to receive them, and after several attempts to drive it, gave up the contest. Towards the close of October the Tenth Corps, together with the Eighteenth, had a spirited engagement near the little village of Darbytown, in which the Ninety-seventh lost two killed, eight wounded, and one missing. Captain George W. Hawkins, in command of the regiment, was mortally wounded.

In the meantime, as the term of service of officers and men who had not re-enlisted expired, they were mustered out of service, and by the end of October all had been retired except veterans and recruits, numbering one hundred and fifty, who were left in command of Lieutenant John Wainwright. Soon afterwards a sufficient number of drafted men and substitutes were added to give it the full regimental strength. In December the Army of the James was re-organized, the white troops of the Tenth and Eighteenth Corps becoming the Twenty-fourth, and the colored troops of these corps the Twenty-fifth.

On the 7th of December, the Second Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, embracing the Ninety-seventh, and Paine's First Division (colored) of the Twenty-fifth, the whole numbering about six thousand five hundred men, left the front and proceeded to Fortress Monroe, and on the 13th accompanied the expedition of Butler and Porter against Fort Fisher, North Carolina. Lieutenant Martin was left in charge of the camp of the regiment, with a portion of the conscripts, whom he was instructed to drill. At noon of the 24th the bombardment of the fort commenced, the powder boat Louisiana, at a quarter before two that morning, having been exploded without effect. On the afternoon of the 25th, a force of about three thousand men, under General Ames, in which was the Ninety-seventh, landed. A reconnoissance was at once made by General Weitzel, who reported adversely to an assault, and accordingly General Butler ordered the troops to be withdrawn, and re-embarking, returned to their camps on the James.

On the 2d of January, 1865, the same troops, with the addition of Abbott's Brigade of General Terry's First Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, numbering one thousand five hundred men, and a small siege train, all under command of General Terry, again departed for the reduction of Fort Fisher. Eight commissioned officers and one hundred and eighty-one men of the Ninety-seventh, under command of Lieutenant John Wainwright, accompanied the expedition. Landing upon the narrow peninsula upon which the fort is built, Terry approached within two miles of the works, and established a line running quite across from the ocean to the river, which he intrenched, and behind it planted his artillery, the fire of the navy in the meantime being continuous and effective. Ames' Division, consisting of the brigades of Curtis, Pennypacker, and Bell, was selected for the assault. One hundred sharp-shooters, armed with Spencer repeating rifles, were sent forward at a run, to within one hundred and seventy-five yards of the fort, where with spades with which they were provided they soon sheltered themselves in pits. The three brigades, in the order above named, then moved up in rear of the sharp-shooters and also intrenched. "At twenty-five minutes past three P. M.," says General Terry, in his official report, "all the preparations were completed, the order to move forward was given to General Ames, and a concerted signal was made to Admiral Porter to change the direction of his fire. Curtis' Brigade at once sprang from their trenches, and dashed forward in line. Its left was exposed to a severe enfilading fire, and it obliqued to the right so as to envelope the left of the land front. The ground over which it moved was marshy and difficult; but it soon reached the palisades, passed through them, and effected a lodgment on the parapet. * * * When Curtis moved forward, Ames directed Pennypacker to move up to the rear of the sharp-shooters, and brought Bell up to Pennypacker's late position, and as soon as Curtis got a foothold on the parapet, sent Pennypacker to his support. Pennypacker advanced, overlapping Curtis' right, and drove the enemy from the heavy palisading, which extended from the west end of the land face to the river, capturing a considerable number of prisoners; then pushing forward to their left, the two brigades together drove the enemy from about one-quarter of the land face. Ames then brought up Bell's Brigade, and moved it between the works and the river. * * * Hand to hand fighting of the most desperate character ensued, the huge traverses of the land face being used successively by the enemy as breast-works, over the tops of which the contending parties fired into each others faces. Nine of these were carried one after the other by our men. * * * Until six o'clock, the fire of the navy continued upon that portion of the work not occupied by us. After that time, it was directed upon the beach, to prevent the coming up of re-inforcements. * * * The fighting for the traverses continued till nearly nine o'clock, two more of them being carried. Then a portion of Abbott's Brigade, which had been brought to the support of the assault, drove the enemy from their last remaining strongholds, and the occupation of the fort was completed. The same brigade, with General Blackburn's Regiment, (colored,) was immediately pushed down the point to Battery Buchanan, whither many of the garrison had fled. On reaching the battery all of the enemy, who had not been previously captured, were made prisoners. Among them were Major General Whiting, and Colonel Lamb the commandant of the fort. * * * In all the works were found one hundred and sixty-nine pieces of artillery, nearly all heavy, over two thousand stand of small arms, considerable quantities of commissary stores, and full supplies of ammunition. Our prisoners numbered one hundred and twelve commissioned officers, and one thousand nine hundred and seventy-one enlisted men. I have no words to do justice to the behavior of both officers and men on this occasion. All that men could do they did. Better soldiers never fought. Brigadier General Curtis, and Colonels Pennypacker, Bell, and Abbott, the brigade commanders, led with the utmost gallantry. Curtis was wounded after fighting in the front rank rifle in hand; Pennypacker, while carrying the standard of one of his regiments, (the Ninety-seventh,) the first man in a charge over a traverse. Bell was mortally wounded near the palisades." "Colonel G. Pennypacker," says General Ames, in his report, "commanding Second Brigade, was severely wounded, while planting the colors of his leading regiment (the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania) on the third traverse of the work. This officer was surpassed by none, and his absence during the remainder of the day was most deeply felt and seriously regretted." Lieutenant John Wainwright, who led the regiment, was honorably mentioned by General Ames. "A series of traverses," says Lieutenant Wainwright, "each a fort itself, were charged and re-charged, and for seven long hours the two armies fought furiously inside the fort, and not until ten o'clock at night were the rebels finally subdued and forced to surrender, which was greeted with deafening cheers by the weary soldiers, and a display of hundreds of rockets by the fleet." The regiment lost four killed, Lieutenant Henry Odiorne being of the number, and thirty-seven wounded. Colonel Pennypacker, and Lieutenants T. M. Smedley, C. F. Haines, J. B. Taylor, L. R. Thomas, and G. W. Duffee, were among the wounded, Lieutenant Haines mortally. The regiment was encamped after the surrender near the magazine, but was fortunately ordered away before the fatal explosion.

Abandoning Fort Caswell and the extensive works at Smithville, the enemy retired to Fort Anderson, and prepared for a stubborn defence of Wilmington, his chief remaining port of entry. Terry was joined soon after by the Twenty-third Corps, and General Schofield assumed command of the entire land force, known as the Army of the Ohio. A flank movement turned the enemy out of Fort Anderson, and on the 22d of February, Wilmington, with its immense stores of arms, ammunition, and cotton, was occupied. So rapid was the movement, that about four thousand Union prisoners, which he was unable to remove, fell into the hands of the victorious army. Some of these belonged to the Ninety-seventh. The joy of the sick and wounded men, famishing with hunger, knew no bounds. They danced, sang, and wept; they hugged their old comrades, and in every way manifested their gratitude at being rescued from inevitable starvation and death.

Remaining at Wilmington until the 15th of March, General Terry moved to effect a junction with General Sherman's Army, at Goldsboro, General Schofield at the same time setting out from Newbern for the same destination. Schofield and Terry arrived on the 21st, and met Sherman coming up from Georgia, on the day following. In the advance upon Raleigh, the Ninety-seventh was detached and sent to the assistance of the cavalry train under Kilpatrick, and remained with it, performing arduous service, until it reached the State Capital, whence Sherman pushed up vigorously, and after some ineffectual negotiations, received the surrender of the rebel army under Johnston at Durham's Station on the 26th of April.

From the 16th of April until the 10th of July, the regiment remained at Raleigh, engaged in various duty incident to securing tranquility, and putting in operation the Freedman's Bureau. In the meantime, considerable sickness prevailed, several died, and a number, for various causes, were discharged. On the 23d of May, Colonel Pennypacker was promoted to Brigadier General, and took leave of the regiment which he had served with from the first, and which he had led in the most desperate encounters. On the 11th of July, seven companies, under Colonel Wainwright, were stationed at Gaston, and three, under command of Captain Underwood, at Weldon, Major Martin being on duty in a court martial. The regiment was subsequently detailed for various duty in this Department. It was finally mustered out of service on the 28th of August, at Weldon. Returning, six hundred strong, by rail to Petersburg and City Point, it moved by transport to Baltimore, and thence by rail to Philadelphia, where it was received with fitting honors, and was bountifully entertained at the Cooper Shop and Union Volunteer Refreshment saloons. Retiring to Camp Cadwalader, it remained until the 4th of September, when it was paid and finally disbanded.

NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

BY order of the War Department, of August 1st, 1861, Colonel John F. Ballier was authorized to raise a regiment of infantry to serve for three years, in place of the Twenty-first Regiment of the three months' service, which he had commanded, the term of which had expired on the 29th of July, though not mustered out till the 8th of August. Recruiting was immediately commenced, and on the 17th the first company, I, was mustered in. Companies D, C, F, A, E, K, and B were mustered at intervals between that date and the 26th of September, and as mustered were sent to Camp Ballier, within the limits of the city of Philadelphia, where the regiment was exclusively recruited. The majority of men and officers were of German origin, had served in the Twenty-first Regiment, and many of them in the armies of their native land. They received clothing immediately on entering camp, but arms and accoutrements were not delivered until two months later. The arms were the Belgian rifled musket, an excellent piece for distance and accuracy, much prized by the men, which in 1863 were exchanged for the much lighter Springfield rifle. A regimental organization was effected by the selection of the following field officers: John F. Ballier, Colonel; Adolph Mehler, Lieutenant Colonel; George Wynkoop, Major.

The first eight companies left Philadelphia on the 30th of September, for Washington, and upon their arrival encamped at Kalorama Heights for nine days, when they were ordered to join General Peck's Brigade,* stationed at Tenallytown. During the month of December the two remaining companies, G and H, joined the regiment, bringing the number up to the full standard. Evolutions of the line, which had been commenced while in camp at Philadelphia, were continued at Tenallytown, and a thorough drill with the use of arms was instituted. A school for officers was established, which was in session one hour nightly, and the non-commissioned officers received instruction in artillery drill at Fort Pennsylvania, later Fort Reno. The monotony of the camp was not disturbed until the 10th of March, 1862, when the brigade was ordered across the Chain Bridge to Prospect Hill, where it lay under arms for nearly a week, exposed to a severe rain storm, when it returned again to its old quarters.

On the 26th of March it embarked from Alexandria for the Peninsula, where, upon its arrival, it encamped near the ruins of the little village of

* Organization of Peck's Brigade, Couch's Division, Keyes' Corps: Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel James M. M'Carter; Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel John F. Ballier; One Hundred and Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Thomas A. Rowley; Sixty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel John L. Riker; Fifty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel Regis De Trobriand.

At the conclusion of the Peninsula Campaign, the Fifty-fifth New York was detached and the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, Colonel Frederick H. Collier, was added to it.

Hampton. After ten days it proceeded to Warwick Court House, where it was principally employed in building corduroy roads, bastions and breastworks. On the 4th of May, the enemy having retreated, the works constructed with so great care were abandoned, and after a weary march, it arrived in front of Williamsburg, where it fought its first battle. The Ninety-third was in the advance and was first engaged. The Ninety-eighth followed, or rather relieved it. The conflict was severe, but more keenly felt than subsequent contests of greater magnitude, because here the men looked upon their first dead and wounded. The loss was four killed and four wounded.

On the 7th of May the Ninety-eighth was ordered to General Stoneman's command, and moved with the advance guard, comprising in addition Roberts' Battery of Sixth United States, the Eighth Illinois Cavalry, and the Second Rhode Island Cavalry. The three weeks spent on the march from Williamsburg to Mechanicsville, for ease and comfort, were not excelled during the campaign. Starting on the march at the precise hour of the morning appointed, and bivouacking at an early hour in the evening, with plenteous food at regular hours, travelling through a beautiful country, with just enough of skirmishing to give a pleasant excitement, the command was brought to its destination near Mechanicsville on the 26th of May. Being thus detached from the brigade it was prevented from participating in the battle of Fair Oaks. It made a forced march to Hanover Junction, where it intercepted a train of cars, which was destroyed with a portion of the track. Upon its return to camp it was ordered to re-join its brigade, advance guards being now no longer needed. Crossing the Chickahominy it proceeded to the neighborhood of White Oak Swamp, where it was put upon picket, in line facing Richmond. From the morning of the 27th to the morning of the 28th, it was engaged near Fair Oaks in holding the enemy in check, having one killed and nine wounded. Skirmishing its way back to Malvern Hill, it was there engaged on the 1st of July, during the entire day, and until its ammunition was exhausted, of which it had been very saving, only using it when brought into actual conflict with the foe. The loss was severe; two officers and nine men killed, one officer and thirty-three men wounded, and several missing, supposed to be killed. Captain William Sehr and Lieutenant Christian A. Gallas were killed.

Worn and fatigued to the last degree, the regiment got into camp on the 3d; but it proved an unhealthy locality and many sickened and died, their constitutions probably weakened by previous hardships and exposure. The order, which came on the 11th, to break camp and move, was not unwelcome. Proceeding to Yorktown, it encamped in a peach orchard, a most agreeable spot, until the 30th, when it was taken by transport to Alexandria. The baggage was sent by separate transport, which was sunk on its way, and all the property, books, and papers of the regiment were lost. After its arrival it lay along the streets of the town for two hours, and then was ordered to go forward; "and forward we did go," says Colonel Ballier; "but soon it became evident that something must be wrong, for ambulances, army wagons, ammunition trains, artillery, and straggling cavalry and infantry came hurrying towards us in the most complete confusion, faster than we could hurry onward. Besides it appeared that ours was the only brigade out of our division, Couch's, that had been sent on. This division had, at Yorktown, been taken out of the Fourth Corps, and had not been assigned to any other command. Still onward we hurried, without rest, all night, until we reached the neighborhood of Centreville, where the brigade halted at last. As the hours wore on, the confusion increased. Soon after daylight one regiment of infantry after another, mixed up with artillery and vehicles of all description, came hurrying down the road, and the firing came nearer and nearer. It was the route from Bull Run! We rested on our arms until morning, and then, too, began to fall back gradually, about one hundred paces at a time, and always coming to a front again, until we reached Fairfax Court House."

After a few days rest the regiment took up the line of march, crossing the Potomac on the 12th of September, into Maryland, at Edwards' Ferry, and proceeded to Rohrersville, where it was kindly received. Here it remained until the morning of the 18th, when it proceeded on a reconnoitring expedition to Maryland Heights, overlooking Harper's Ferry, the battle of Antietam having been fought on the previous day. It returned at night to the neighborhood of Sharpsburg, and rested upon the ground where the battle had been raging. On the 20th it marched to Williamsport, to intercept a raiding party of the enemy, but arrived too late to effect anything.

Re-crossing the Potomac at Berlin, the regiment marched to New Baltimore, where M'Clellan surrendered the command of the army to Burnside. At White Oak Church, near Falmouth, it went into camp apparently for the winter; but on the 12th of December was called out, and crossing the river at the lower bridges, was held in reserve near the river, during the battle of Fredericksburg, retiring with the army from the fruitless struggle on the 15th, and returning to its old camp. It spent four days, from the 20th to the 24th of January, marching and counter-marching in Burnside's Mud Campaign, and again returned to its camp.

Under General Hooker's organization of the army, the brigade, now commanded by General Wheaton, was attached to the Sixth Corps. In the Chancellorsville Campaign, this corps was left to operate upon the flank and rear of the enemy. It crossed the Rappahannock at the lower, or Franklin's crossing. The Ninety-eighth passed over on Saturday evening, the 2d of May, and moved up to the city of Fredericksburg, the enemy who had been left to guard the town being easily routed, and rested at night upon the streets. At dawn, on Sunday morning, it was saluted with rapid rounds of grape and canister, and was soon in position, pressing forward upon Maryes' Heights, which were carried and occupied, the Ninety-eighth losing one killed and one wounded. Without pausing longer than to re-form the columns, Sedgwick pressed on in pursuit of the flying enemy, and came up with him intrenched near a cross roads, known as Salem Heights. "During the battle at Salem Heights," says General Wheaton, in his official report, "the Ninety-eighth Pennsylvania and the Sixty-second New York were necessarily left on the south side of the main road, where they performed gallant service, under the officer in charge of that part of the line. They lost heavily, and held their positions to the last. Colonel Ballier, of the Ninety-eighth, at that time received a severe wound in the foot, and was taken from the field. During Sunday night the brigade, except the One Hundred and Thirty-ninth Pennsylvania, which could not be relieved from its important position in front, was assembled in a field near the junction of the main and Banks' Ford Road: here we bivouacked, filled our ammunition boxes, received our knapsacks, sent by train from Fredericksburg, and rested after having fought two battles in twelve hours, and skirmished all day. *

* * At three and a half P. M. on the 4th, the left of the Third Division was attacked by a strong column of the enemy, but our batteries soon drove them back. At five P. M. our extreme left, held by the Second Division, was hard pressed, and I was ordered to send a regiment to Howe's right. The Ninety-eighth, under Lieutenant Colonel Wynkoop, was immediately dispatched, with a staff officer, and almost immediately after, I was ordered to the same point with the whole brigade. We moved down the Plank Road at a double quick and turned into a field on our left, and formed line of battle advancing. The most advanced rebel battalions of the attacking column were within fifty yards of a low furze fence, just as the Ninety-eighth was at an equal distance from this side. Shouting and firing as he advanced, Lieutenant Colonel Wynkoop reached the fence first, and checked the rebels, who found an unexpected line to meet them. Seeing it well supported, and my other three regiments advancing, they fell back and were easily captured." Sedgwick's Corps being overpowered and nearly surrounded, was obliged to retire, and crossing the river at Banks' Ford, returned to its former camp. The loss in the regiment was one officer and four men killed, and three officers and seventeen men wounded. Lieutenant George Busch was mortally wounded.

Until the 20th of June the regiment remained in camp, when with the division it proceeded to Kelly's Ford, and crossing the river was engaged in building a line of entrenchments. When completed, they were abandoned, it having been ascertained that the enemy had determined to invade the north, and was already far on his way. The march north was accordingly commenced, and on the 1st of July it arrived at Manchester, Maryland. On the evening of that day, in response to urgent calls, it commenced a forced march to Gettysburg. Soon after its arrival on the field, on the afternoon of the 2d, Wheaton's Brigade was ordered into action on the left, and took position on the low wooded hillock to the right and front of Little Round Top, the Ninety-eighth occupying the right of the brigade. When the troops of Sickles' Corps, which had been posted on a more advanced line, were driven back, this brigade held its position unmoved, and on the following day advanced a little, and though exposed to a terrible artillery fire, had few casualties, except from sharpshooters. Two officers and ten men wounded, was the extent of its losses in the entire battle.

The 4th was given to burying the dead and removing the wounded, and on the morning of the 5th the corps started in pursuit. Beyond slight skirmishing with his rear guard, no serious collision took place, until in the neighborhood of the Antietam battle-field, where he was overtaken and preparations were made for a battle; but before it was delivered, he escaped. And now ensued a campaign over the old ground in Virginia, reaching from the Blue Ridge to the Potomac and the Rapidan, in which were frequent minor collisions of parts of the army with the enemy, but no general engagement, and at its close at Mine Run, on the 2d of December, where great suffering and hardship were endured, it returned to camp at Brandy Station, and went into winter-quarters. At its entrance into service, the regiment numbered one thousand and ten men; in the summer of 1862, and subsequently, bodies of recruits were added to it; it was now reduced to three hundred and twenty-nine. Of this number two hundred and twenty-nine re-enlisted for a second term, and were mustered on the 23d. The promised furlough, which had operated as a strong inducement to re-enlist, was long delayed. At the close of December, the brigade was ordered to Harper's Ferry. The weather was intensely cold, and the movement, by rail, in box cars, and in open trucks without fire, was attended with great suffering. From Harper's Ferry the brigade marched to Halltown, where the Ninety-eighth was detached and sent forward to Charlestown. Colonel Ballier was made commander of the post at Charlestown, and the companies were comfortably quartered in unoccupied buildings about the town.

On the 1st of February the long promised furlough was granted, and leaving the one hundred, who had not re-enlisted, at Harper's Ferry, the veterans departed for home. On the 18th of March, the furlough being ended, they assembled at Chester, where they remained until the 26th. They then returned to their old camp at Brandy Station. Meanwhile the men left at Harper's Ferry had performed guard duty at the Harper's Ferry prison, and subsequently had been ordered to Halltown, whence they had been sent at intervals on picket to Snicker's Gap. Towards the close of March they joined the veterans at Brandy Station.

With the corps, the regiment moved on the 3d of May on the Wilderness Campaign, and on the morning of the 5th, while on the march, was suddenly attacked, before the line of battle could be formed. The One Hundred and Thirty-ninth was in advance, and received the first shock. The enemy, who at first seemed to be retreating, was followed up; but he soon made a determined stand, and fought desperately, the Ninety-eighth holding its ground for two hours under a furious musketry fire, and until its ammunition was all spent, when it was relieved. The loss in this day's fight was one officer, Lieutenant Charles H. Wiedman, and eight men killed, and four officers and fifty-two men wounded.

The men slept in the rifle pits at night, and in the morning went forward, past their dead comrades, still lying where they fell, and followed the enemy up for nearly two miles, when he was found behind breastworks, and was attacked. By a movement in concentrated force upon the flank, he compelled the Union line to fall back in some confusion. General Getty was here wounded, General Wheaton succeeding to the command of the division, Colonel Ballier to that of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Kohler of the regiment. On the evening of the 7th the regiment moved away towards Spottsylvania. At four o'clock on the morning of the 11th, eight companies, under Lieutenant Colonel Kohler, were ordered to picket duty near Spottsylvania Court House. The firing upon the picket line was incessant, and these companies lost two killed and four wounded. The remaining two companies were engaged with the brigade, and had one killed and six wounded. The picket was relieved on the 13th, and on the 14th the regiment moved to Anderson's Farm. At evening of the 17th it was summoned back, and marched or rather crept all night, and crossed the breastworks at daylight of the 18th. It was saluted by a shower of shot and shell as it passed the open field, having five men wounded, without an opportunity of returning the fire. At eleven o'clock it was relieved, and marching, crossed the North Anna, but soon re-crossed, and on the 28th crossed the Pamunky, and moved to Hanover Court House. On the 1st of June it was ordered to Cold Harbor. After being exposed to the hot sun all day, it was obliged to work all night on the rifle-pits. Here, while out upon the picket line, Major John W. Beamish was killed. On the following day it was called away from the works, and ordered to attack farther to the right. The fighting lasted the entire day, in which Adjutant Edward Schwatlo and thirteen men were killed, and two officers and thirty-nine men wounded. Marching and fighting, it finally reached the James River, and crossed on the 16th of June.

In the operations in front of Petersburg, the regiment was engaged on the 18th in an unsuccessful charge, in which it had two killed and eleven wounded, and on the evening of the 21st, with the corps, moved upon a raid to the Weldon Railroad, which it partially destroyed. The enemy having made his appearance in force in front of Washington, on the 9th of July the Sixth Corps started for the Capital, where upon its arrival, the brigade, now under command of Colonel Ballier, marched to Fort Stevens, and the Ninety-eighth was ordered to establish a picket line in front of the fort. The enemy kept up a rapid fire, and before the line could be formed the regiment had five wounded. On the following morning the enemy made a serious attempt to force the line, which was defeated, and the regiment held its ground during all that day and the following night, with a loss of eight killed and twenty-eight wounded. Colonel Ballier and Lieutenant Colonel Kohler were wounded, the former seriously. He was soon after promoted to Brigadier General.

The campaign of the Shenandoah now opened, but for over two months was carried on without advantage, though marching and counter-marching made the duty unusually severe. Finally, General Sheridan was sent to take command of the army, and on the 19th of September attacked the enemy in his chosen position upon the Opequan. The ground was stubbornly contested, and the Ninety-eighth was hotly engaged. At length the enemy was driven, and retreated rapidly up the valley. The Ninety-eighth lost one officer, Lieutenant John Heppler, and five men killed, and three officers and nineteen men wounded. Among the killed were some whose term of service had expired. Sheridan followed up rapidly, and at Fisher's Hill found his adversary disposed again to fight. In the engagement which followed, the brigade was selected to charge up a steep hill in face of infantry and artillery fire, and triumphantly carried the difficult position, the colors of the Ninety-eighth being the first planted upon the works. The loss was only three men wounded.

The Union army now fell back behind Cedar Creek, where early on the morning of the 19th of October, just one month from the battle of Winchester, the rebel army attacked, and were successful in driving a part of the army and making extensive captures. The Sixth Corps stood firm for a time, and in the desperate struggle which it made to hold its ground, the Ninety-eighth was frequently shifted, according to the emergencies of the battle, from point to point, all the while under a most destructive fire, and losing, at one time, within a few minutes, fourteen men killed and thirty-four wounded. The enemy finally succeeded in outflanking this corps, and in forcing it back. At noon General Sheridan, who was at Winchester when the battle opened, arrived on the field. After a brief respite the army was put upon the offensive, and after severe fighting, the enemy was driven with heavy loss in men and material. Lieutenant Colonel John B. Kohler, while inspecting the pickets as officer of the day, was killed. The army now marched back and went into camp four miles above Winchester.

In January the corps was ordered to return to the lines in front of Petersburg. Here the regiment for two months was employed in building forts and breastworks, performing picket duty, and preparing for the spring campaign. On the morning of the 2d of April, the regiment was formed in line in front of the enemy's works, and with the brigade was ordered to attack. His first line was easily carried, and after a brief struggle his main works were taken. Following up the advantage, he was driven some three miles beyond Hatcher's Run. The brigade then returned and joined the division, and was led towards Petersburg. The enemy opened fire upon it from all sides. A battery posted near the house, where, in the morning, General Lee had had his headquarters, was captured by the brigade, and the enemy was again driven. Lieutenant Colonel Charles Reen, commanding the regiment, was severely wounded, losing a leg. The regiment had besides, one officer, Lieutenant Herman Solbrig, and two men killed, and two officers and eleven men wounded. On the 6th the corps attacked the enemy at Sailor's Creek, and captured General Ewell and staff, and a large body of his men. Three days later the entire rebel army surrendered. On the 10th the regiment returned to Burkesville, where seven hundred drafted men and substitutes, without arms, were assigned to the regiment, and on the following day started on a forced march to Danville, on the borders of North Carolina. Upon its arrival it went into camp. The necessity for further service in the field having ended, shortly after, it returned by easy stages to Washington, where on the 29th of June it was mustered out of service. Upon its return to Philadelphia, it was received with the warmest manifestations of rejoicing. The colors, which had been presented by the State in the summer of 1863, and had been inscribed, during the time of the veteran furlough, with the battles in which the regiment up to that time had fought, were, on the 4th of July, 1866, returned to the Governor of the State, at Independence Hall, amidst the imposing ceremonies of that occasion.

NINETY-NINTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited through the agency of Thomas W. Sweeney and William P. Seymour, who had received the requisite authority from the War Department, under date of July 20th, 1861, with the title of the Thirty-second Regiment. On the 8th of August, when only three companies had been recruited and mustered in, it was ordered to Washington, under the command of Romaine Lujeane, an Italian, who had been recommended for the position of Colonel by Messrs. Sweeney and Seymour, he being supposed to possess superior military experience. After remaining a few weeks in the city, the three companies were ordered to join General Jameson's Brigade, of Heintzelman's Division, in camp near Alexandria. Additional companies were recruited and sent forward from Philadelphia, from time to time, and in February, 1862, two companies from the Sixty-sixth Regiment, at that time disbanded, were assigned to it, bringing it up to the full strength of a regiment. The men were almost exclusively from the city of Philadelphia, and many of them had served in the three months' campaign, in the Twenty-second Regiment.

On the 7th of November, 1861, Romaine Lujeane, who had been mustered as Lieutenant Colonel, resigned, and Thomas W. Sweeney was commissioned Colonel; William P. Seymour, Lieutenant Colonel; and Asher S. Leidy, Major. While in camp near Alexandria, it was engaged in building forts, and in drill and picket duty. On the 19th of February it was ordered back to Washington, and was assigned to garrison duty. It went into camp near Burning Bridge, and garrisoned Forts Mahon, Meigs, Davis, and Baker. Colonel Sweeney, who had resigned towards the close of January, was succeeded by Peter Fritz, and Lieutenant Colonel Seymour, who had also resigned, by Major Leidy, Captain Henry A. Read being appointed Major. The number was also changed from the Thirty-second to the Ninety-ninth.

On the 3d of April, by General Order from Headquarters of the Department of Washington, Colonel Fritz was placed in command of ten forts on the east side of the Annacosta River, stretching from Burning Bridge to opposite Alexandria. The garrisons of these forts were constituted as follows: Company K, Captain John W. Moore, Fort Meigs; company C, Captain William J. Uhler, Fort Davis; company B, Captain Peter Fritz, Jr., Fort Baker; company I, Captain John J. Carberry, Fort Ricketts; company A, Captain James Cross, Fort Stanton; company H, Lieutenant Isaac H. Seesholtz, Fort Wagner; company D, Captain Adam Schuh, Fort Carrol; company G, Captain Albanus H. Snyder, Fort Du Pont; company F, Captain Albert H. Wright, Fort Greble; company E, Captain John W. Holbrook, Fort Baker, where the headquarters were established. On the 10th of June, Colonel Fritz resigned, and Lieutenant Colonel Leidy was promoted to succeed him.

On the 29th of June the regiment was ordered to the Peninsula, to join the army of the Potomac. It reached Harrison's Landing, where the army was in camp, on the 4th of July, and was assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Third Corps. It was immediately placed on duty in the trenches and on picket. While here, Adjutant Edward R. Biles was appointed, by General Kearny, Lieutenant Colonel, to date from July 1st. Remaining here until the middle of August—the army having been ordered to evacuate the Peninsula—it moved with the corps, passing through Orkney, Williamsburg, and Yorktown, and proceeded by transport to Acquia Creek. The commands of Hooker and Kearny were the first to arrive, and were ordered to march immediately to Alexandria, where they arrived on the 23d of August. Taking cars, these troops proceeded to Catlett's Station, with the intent of joining General Pope's command. But when the brigade had arrived in the neighborhood of Warrenton Junction, on the morning of the 27th, it was ordered to move with all possible dispatch to the support of Hooker's Division, which was engaging the corps of Stonewall Jackson near Manassas Junction. After a sharp action the enemy was driven, and the divisions were ordered to form a junction with Pope at Bull Run. A hard march of over twenty miles brought the regiment to the battle-ground at Groveton at eight P. M. The battle opened on its front at seven on the following morning, and was kept up through the entire day, without advantage to the Union side. On the 29th the battle line was three times changed, and at night the army fell back towards Centreville. The loss in the regiment, in the three days' fighting, was three killed and ten wounded. At three P. M. of the 1st of September, while on the march, the regiment was arrested by heavy firing to the left of it, and was at once formed in battle-line by General Kearny. Moving through the wood to the left, it went to the support of General Reno's Division, who had fallen in with Jackson, near Chantilly. Darkness soon put an end to the conflict, and in the morning it was found that the enemy had withdrawn. General Kearny was killed. He was greatly beloved and sincerely mourned by all in his command.

Returning to Alexandria it rested until the 13th, when it moved into Maryland, and reached Rockville on the 16th. Being in rear of the army it was not engaged in either the battle at South Mountain or Antietam. On the 19th it was ordered to guard the line of the Potomac, from Weeden's Ford to the Monocacy Aqueduct, and subsequently from Edwards' Ferry to the aqueduct.

On the 28th of October, with the rest of the army, it re-crossed the Potomac. Beyond light skirmishing and long and wearisome marches, the regiment was not engaged until the battle of Fredericksburg. At eight A. M., on the 13th of December, it crossed the Rappahannock at the lower bridges, and was ordered to the support of Randolph's Battery, First Rhode Island; at two P. M., it was relieved from this service and led into action. For five hours the fighting was desperate, the brigade holding its position, and resting at night on the field. At four A. M. it was relieved by a regiment of the Excelsior Brigade, of Hooker's Division. It remained on the field until two A. M. of the 16th, when, with the rest of the army, it went back to camp. In the action it lost six men killed, and five officers and forty-nine men wounded. Colonel Leidy was among the wounded.

On the 20th of January, 1863, it moved at seven A. M. on Burnside's second campaign, and halted near United States Ford for the pontoon train to come up. Finally it was ordered back to assist in bringing it up, but found it fast in the mud, and on the 23d, the campaign having been abandoned, it returned to camp. On the 28th, the army under command of General Hooker being about to move on the Chancellorsville campaign, the regiment marched with the brigade to Port Royal, seven miles below Fredericksburg, where it remained until the 30th, for the purpose of drawing the attention of the enemy from the real point of crossing, which was to be several miles above. The main body safely over, it started on the 30th on a forced march for Chancellorsville, which it reached on the 1st of May, and was immediately put to intrenching. Birney's Division, of the Third Corps, which was intended as a reserve, was thrown out to the right between the Eleventh and Twelfth Corps, and was finally ordered forward upon the right centre, striking the rear of Jackson's rebel column, and taking some prisoners. When the Eleventh Corps was attacked on flank and rear by Jackson, and routed and driven in towards Chancellorsville, Birney, in his advanced position, was flanked and cut off. But it was now night, and the rebel headlong advance had been stayed by the artillery of Pleasanton. At eleven P. M., Sickles ordered Birney to charge and cut his way back to the main line. The Ninety-ninth was on the right of the first line of battle. It was the grand moonlight charge of Kearny's old division, and it swept the enemy back over the ground where Jackson received his mortal wound, and recovered lost guns and caissons, and a portion of the abandoned field. In the morning General Hooker decided to take up a new line nearer the river, where his forces would be more concentrated, and the commanding ground, which had been gained at a fearful cost, had to be abandoned. Birney's Division held the rear and retired facing the foe, who pursued closely and kept up a vigorous fire. During the entire day the fighting was severe and little interrupted. During the two succeeding days the skirmishing was brisk. On the morning of the 6th, the command was withdrawn across the river, and the regiment returned to its former camp.

Here it remained engaged in guard and picket duty until the 11th of June, when it entered upon the Pennsylvania campaign, and on the evening of the 30th, arrived at Emmettsburg, Maryland. On the 1st of July firing was heard to the north, and though Sickles had been ordered to move to a position on Pipe Creek, he decided to be guided by the sound of the enemy's cannon, and at three P. M. commenced the march towards Gettysburg. At nine P. M. he arrived upon the field by the Emmettsburg Road, and bivouacked for the night in the fields to the right of it. At eight A. M. on the 2d, the line of battle was formed, looking towards the Blue Ridge; but at two P. M., the enemy demonstrating in force upon the left, Ward's Brigade was moved to the extreme left of the corps, and formed at right angles to the general line of battle, the Ninety-ninth occupying the extreme left of the brigade in the open field facing the Devil's Den, and but a short distance from it. While forming, Major Moore, who was in command, was wounded and taken from the field, and Captain Peter Fritz, Jr., succeeded him. The regiment was hardly in position when the storm of battle burst upon it, and raged with a fury scarcely paralleled. The earnest fighting first opened upon the front of this brigade, and swept on from left to right, until the whole front of the corps was enveloped. With but a slight stone breastwork, scarcely eighteen inches in height, for protection, the regiment held its ground without faltering until half past four, when it was relieved by a force of regulars of the Fifth Corps, and retired, leaving half its number killed and wounded on the field. For its gallantry in holding its position it received the thanks of Generals Ward and Birney, and Captain Fritz was recommended for promotion. The regiment remained during the morning of the 3d in the third line of battle in the same position which it had held on the previous day, and Major Moore, who had now returned, resumed command. Immediately after the fearful cannonade of the afternoon, and when the flower of the rebel army was led to the last desperate charge, the Ninety-ninth was moved to the support of the Second Corps, and followed it as far as the Emmettsburg Pike, where it remained during the night and all day of the 4th. On the morning of the 5th it was relieved, and fell back to the wood in the rear, the enemy having retired and being now in full retreat. In this battle Lieutenant John R. Nice was killed, and five other officers were wounded. The regiment joined in the pursuit, passing through Emmettsburg and Keedysville, and formed in battle-line near Funkstown at two A. M. on the 12th. Before preparations were completed for delivering a general battle the enemy escaped across the river, and the campaign was ended.

Crossing the Potomac on the 17th, the regiment moved on south with the army, engaging the enemy at Wapping Heights on the 23d, having three wounded, and halted on the 26th at Hedgeman's River, near the Warrenton Sulphur Springs, where it remained in camp and on picket until the 10th of October. In the retrograde movement of the army which then commenced, the regiment joined, and in the skirmish at Auburn, on the 12th, lost two wounded, reaching Fairfax Station, the limit of the movement, at night of the 15th. After a halt of three days it again took up the line of advance, and upon its arrival at Catlett's Station, was ordered to picket duty, where it remained several days. On the 7th of November the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania, the Fortieth New York, and Twentieth Indiana were ordered to cross the Rappahannock at Kelly's Ford, and dislodge the enemy from the opposite shore. The stream was forded in five feet of water, and covering the ridge in front, they succeeded in capturing four hundred prisoners, and opening the way for the advance of the army to Mine Run. The Ninety-ninth lost one killed and seven wounded, Lieutenant Abraham Setley being among the wounded. On the afternoon of the 27th, the regiment reached the front at Orange Farm, and formed line of battle, relieving the One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York. It lost during the night seven wounded. On the following day it reached the enemy's works at Mine Run and was deployed as skirmishers, capturing forty of the enemy and losing five wounded. Falling back and re-forming, the brigade again advanced, and when within fifty yards of the enemy's lines threw up breast-works and held the position with small loss, until it was decided to withdraw the army without delivering battle. The regiment then retired, and at Brandy Station went into winter-quarters.*

* While in quarters at Brandy Station, George W. Bullock, Esq., of Philadelphia, presented to every officer and man in the regiment, for the second time in its term of service, a pair of woollen gloves. He had previously presented to ten men in each regiment in the Division, who should be reported to him by their officers as having particularly distinguished themselves, a Birney medal. The following are the names of the men who received it in the Ninety-ninth: Private Broley and Sergeant Thomas, of company B; Sergeant Davis, of company G; Corporal Casey, of company K; Sergeant Taylor, of company H; Sergeant Murray and private Henry Landis, of company A; Sergeant Adolphus Garrison, of company C; private Stephen M'Gowan, of company E, and Sergeant J. Wesley Chew, of company I.

Early in February, 1864, a large proportion of the men re-enlisted and were given a furlough. They returned to Philadelphia, where recruiting was actively prosecuted, and at the end of the furlough, on the 30th of March, reported at Chester Barracks, from whence two days later they proceeded to the front, reaching the old quarters at Brandy Station on the 7th. In the meantime the Third Corps had been broken up, and the old Kearny, Birney Division, had been transferred to the Second Corps, now known as the Third Division, and the Second Brigade, to which the Ninety-ninth had been attached, had been changed to the First, General Ward being still in command of it. Upon the retirement of Colonel Leidy from the command of the regiment on the 9th of April, Lieutenant Colonel Biles was commissioned Colonel, and Major Moore, Lieutenant Colonel.

The regiment moved from camp on the spring campaign, under Grant, at evening on the 3d of May, and at four o'clock P. M. of the 5th, met the enemy in the Wilderness. It occupied a position on the extreme left of the division, and maintained its ground during the entire night. Captain Fritz was severely wounded, but remained with his command. At daylight on the morning of the 6th, it advanced with the brigade, the Third Maine and the Fortieth New York having been changed to its left. The First Division of the corps was forced back, and after a severe struggle of two hours the Third also retired to the breast-works at the Brock Road, where at four in the afternoon Longstreet, who was following up this retrograde movement, was checked, and finally driven with great slaughter. The loss in the engagement was seventy-one killed and wounded. Lieutenant Christopher Smith was among the killed. In a circular issued by General Birney at seven in the evening, the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania and the Twentieth Indiana were specially thanked for their gallantry in the battle, these two regiments having maintained their position after the entire line beside had been driven back.

Remaining behind the breast-works until five P. M. of the 7th, it was with the rest of the brigade ordered to Chancellorsville to protect the train, but returned at eleven. On the following morning it moved with the army south, the enemy being unwilling to come out from his works, and at eleven arrived at Todd's Tavern, where it took position in battle line, the left resting on the Spottsylvania Court House Road, and threw up breast-works. On the afternoon of the 9th, with the Twentieth Indiana and One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New York, it crossed the Ny River as division skirmishers. On the morning of the 10th, with the Twentieth and a section of artillery, under the immediate command of General Birney, it crossed the Po River on a reconnoissance, and upon its return was sent to the assistance of General Barlow's Division, which had crossed below and was employed in throwing up breast-works. The part which the regiment bore in the charge of the Second Corps, on the 12th of May, is briefly told in the following extract from the report of the action: "At half past two A. M. of the 12th, we arrived in rear of Spottsylvania Court House, our regiment being on the right of the brigade of the first line of battle. At half past three we advanced at quick time until we reached the enemy's skirmishers, when we charged upon the run. The men poured into the breast-works and advanced along them to the right, the enemy paralyzed by the suddenness of the blow. Two battle flags and two pieces of artillery were captured by the Ninety-ninth, and we claim a fair share of the seven thousand prisoners taken on that memorable morning. As we advanced upon the enemy's second line, Captain Louis F. Waters and Lieutenant Henry S. Zeisert fell mortally wounded, and Colonel Biles, pierced with five wounds, was carried from the field." The command then devolved on Captain Fritz, who held his position in the enemy's second line for half an hour, when he was forced to fall back to the first, and being himself severely wounded, was succeeded by Lieutenant Thomas A. Kelly, and shortly after by Captain Uhler, there being but four officers and sixty men left, out of the three hundred and twenty-five who had crossed the Rapidan.

Great losses had been sustained and but little advantage gained by the army; but the determination to go forward was unwavering. Intrenching, manœuvring, and fighting until the 17th without any substantial success, at ten P. M. of that day, the Ninety-ninth and Twentieth Indiana were ordered to carry the enemy's second line, which had been temporarily occupied on the 12th. This was successfully accomplished before morning. On the following day Lieutenant Colonel Moore, who had been in command of the Seventeenth Maine, returned and resumed command of the regiment, and with the brigade moved to meet the enemy who had attacked the trains. At day-light of the 20th the line again advanced and captured several hundred prisoners. At the Matapony and the North Anna, the enemy was met and driven, and on the 28th the regiment crossed the Pamunky. On the following day the veterans and recruits of the Twenty-sixth regiment were assigned to the Ninety-ninth. Lieutenant Colonel Moore, on account of sickness, was sent to hospital, and the command again devolved on Captain Uhler.

On the 14th of June the brigade crossed the James, and moving up, joined in the operations before Petersburg, which were prosecuted with vigor, with considerable loss in killed and wounded, embracing Lieutenants Isidor Hirsch and Matthew N. Heiskill among the killed. On the 26th of July, with the corps, it crossed the Appomattox and the James, and proceeded to Deep Bottom, where the Ninety-ninth and One Hundred and Tenth, both under command of Colonel Biles, were ordered to reconnoitre the woods in front of the lines. As they advanced, the enemy opened fire, and when they had reached the edge of the woods they were deployed as skirmishers. They were exposed to a heavy fire from the infantry in front, and a hot shelling from a battery of twenty-pounder Parrott guns on the left, but steadily held their position and soon drove the enemy from their front. The First Division having captured the battery, which had proved very annoying, the line was ordered to move forward, and a picket line was established by the command upon the road at the extreme point of the advance. On the evening of the 28th these regiments were relieved and ordered to the rear. Upon the return of the corps to the lines before Petersburg, General Hancock, in command, issued a congratulatory order, in which he said, "While all the troops who kept their ranks and sustained the arduous marches are deserving of praise, the following organizations seem to merit particular mention: * * * * and the skirmish line of General Mott's Division, General De Trobriand's Brigade, particularly the Ninety-ninth and One Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, under the command of Colonel E. R. Biles, for good conduct and bravery in the severe action on the right of the battery."

On the 12th of August the regiment moved with the corps on a second demonstration upon the enemy's lines at Deep Bottom. The regiment was immediately deployed as skirmishers, and crossing the breast-works at ten

A. M. of the 14th, thrown up by the division in its former operations, advanced at double quick towards the enemy's entrenchments, and succeeded in establishing a skirmish line. At three in the afternoon it again advanced under a heavy fire, and halted within seven hundred yards of the enemy's works, driving his skirmishers and capturing seventy-five prisoners. Here it remained during the night, and early on the following morning was saluted by a rapid fire. At nine A. M. it was relieved. Captain Tomlinson was severely wounded. Colonel Biles was wounded, but remained upon the field, and eleven men were more or less severely wounded.

On the 18th the division was detached and ordered to report for special duty to General Meade, in front of Petersburg, and upon its arrival relieved a division of the Ninth Corps on the front line of works, the regiment being stationed on the right of Fort Rice. On the 9th of September Colonel Biles, in command of his own, the Twenty-second Indiana, and the Second United States Sharpshooters, moved out to the left, and deploying in front of Fort Hell, by means of sap-tools, succeeded in establishing a new line of pits, one hundred yards in advance of the old line. At eleven in the evening Major Fritz, in command of the Ninety-ninth, in obedience to a signal from Colonel Biles, advanced by the flank from the woods on the left of the Jerusalem Plank Road and captured two hundred prisoners, maintaining his position until day dawn. The Seventeenth Maine, which connected with the regiment on the right, was driven back, leaving a gap in the line of one hundred yards. Seeing this, Major Fritz ordered his regiment to fall back to the line of pits dug during the night. In executing this hazardous movement Captain Kelly and fifty-two men were taken prisoners, Lieutenant Ellsler was killed, and ten men wounded. A special order from General Hancock, upon this exploit, contained the following complimentary sentiments: "The Major General commanding takes great pleasure in expressing his gratification with the good conduct of the troops engaged in the successful affair of the morning of the 10th inst., resulting in the dislodgement and capture of a considerable portion of the enemy's picket line which had for a long time been in too close proximity to our lines. The troops immediately engaged were the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania, the Twentieth Indiana, and Second United States Sharpsbooters, under command of Colonel E. R. Biles. The officers and men remaining amongst the enemy's pickets during the following day, refusing to surrender, and returning to their command at night when the new lines were established, are thought worthy of particular mention."

On the evening of the 1st of October the regiment proceeded by rail to Yellow House, and thence marched to the extreme left of the lines at Poplar Grove Church, where it had sharp skirmishing, and at evening fell back to Peeble's House, having lost during the day ten men wounded. On the 2d it again advanced and was all day engaged in skirmishing. On the 5th it returned to its former position, and Colonel Biles, with four regiments, was ordered to the occupation of a portion of the line, the Ninety-ninth, Lieutenant Colonel Fritz in command, at Fort Hell, the One Hundred and Tenth Pennsylvania at Batteries 20 and 21, the Seventy-third New York at Fort Sedgwick, and the Eighty-sixth New York in reserve. The regiment remained in this position until October 23d, when it moved out to the Boydton Plank Road, Colonel Biles in command of the brigade, where it was warmly engaged, losing ten men killed, and Captain Bonnaffon and Lieutenants Robinson and Potts, and twenty-three men, wounded. Upon its return, the regiment re-occupied Fort Hell, where it remained until the 30th of November, when it again proceeded to the extreme left, and was employed in picketing the line. On the 7th of December it joined in the expedition upon the Weldon Railroad, and after passing Jarrett's Station commenced the destruction of the road, which was continued a distance of two miles beyond Bellefield. This work accomplished, the regiment returned and went into winter-quarters in front of Fort Seibert, near the Vaughan Road. In the affair at Hatcher's Run early in February, 1865, it was engaged, losing twelve men wounded. From the 3d of February to the 25th of March, it was engaged in picket duty along the Vaughan Road. On the morning of the latter day it moved at four in the morning, and crossing Hatcher's Run, engaged the enemy beyond the Davis House, where Colonel Biles and sixteen men were wounded. On the 26th five hundred drafted men were assigned to the regiment.

On the 28th the general advance of the army commenced, and on the 5th of April the corps came up with the enemy at Five Forks, where a severe battle was fought, and on the 6th at Sailor's Creek it was again engaged, the Ninety-ninth losing Lieutenants Ayars and Clifton wounded, the latter mortally. Following up the retreating foe, he was again encountered on the 8th near Appomattox Court House, where the regiment lost seventy-six men killed and wounded. On the following day, amid shouts of joy and waving of flags, the announcement was made that the rebel army had surrendered. Under command of Lieutenant Colonel Fritz, the regiment returned by easy marches to Richmond, where it was reviewed by General Meade, and thence to the neighborhood of Washington. On the 23d of May it participated in the grand review at the Capital, and on the 1st of July was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDREDTH REGIMENT.

THE One Hundredth, or as it was more commonly known, the Round Head Regiment, was recruited in the south-western counties of the State, originally settled by the Round Heads of the English Revolution, and by Scotch Irish, Covenanters. Daniel Leasure, a citizen of New Castle, who had since 1832 been connected either as private or an officer with the State militia, and who, during the three months' campaign, had served as Captain and Adjutant of the Twelfth Regiment, received authority from the Secretary of War, under date of August 6, 1861, to recruit a regiment of infantry from among the descendants of the Covenanters and of the men who had followed Cromwell, whose leading characteristics had been a devotion to the principles of liberty of person and of conscience.

On the 2d of September the regiment, which had been recruited to the number of twelve companies, was ordered to Washington, whither it at once proceeded, and upon its arrival encamped on Kalorama Heights. A formal organization was soon after effected, and the following field officers were selected and commissioned: Daniel Leasure, Colonel; Captain James Armstrong, Lieutenant Colonel; Captain David A. Leckey, Major. Just previous to the organization, General Casey, in command of provisional brigades at Washington, issued an order transferring companies L and M to the One Hundred and Fifth Regiment. Company L was accordingly thus transferred, and Captain Dick, its commander, became Major of that regiment; but upon the representation of Captain Leckey that his men had been specially recruited for the Round Head Regiment, company M was permitted to remain. It was brigaded on the 7th of October with the Eighth Michigan, Colonel Fenton, and the Fiftieth Pennsylvania, Colonel Christ. As the ranking officer, Colonel Leasure was placed in command of the brigade, and was ordered to proceed with it to Annapolis, there to join the command of General T. W. Sherman, destined to the coast of South Carolina. Soon after its arrival, Colonel Leasure sent a request to the Secretary of War, in behalf of the Round Heads, that the Highlanders, Seventy-Ninth New York, might be associated with them in the same brigade. This request was granted, and on the 12th General Isaac I. Stevens was assigned to its command. On the 19th the fleet sailed from Annapolis and rendezvoused at Fortress Monroe, whence on the 29th it set sail with sealed orders.

The Round Head Regiment and five companies of the Fiftieth Pennsylvania were embarked together on the Ocean Queen. On the second day out the fleet was overtaken by a violent storm, which raged with unabated fury for thirty-six hours. On the morning of the 3d of November, all the other vessels of the fleet being out of sight, Colonel Leasure opened his orders and read, "Sail for Port Royal Entrance," which was the first intimation to any one on board of its destination. On the 5th of November the fleet arrived off Port Royal Entrance, and the gun-boats proceeded to make soundings of the channel. On the morning of the 7th the transports stood in for the entrance, and the gun-boats advanced to the attack of Forts Walker and Beauregard, on the opposite points of Hilton Head and Lady's islands. The troops, meantime, were held in readiness to debark and attack by land; but at three o'clock P. M. the enemy was driven from his works by the terrible broadsides of Dupont's powerful vessels, and fled to the main land or adjacent islands. On the same evening the troops landed and took possession of the forts and islands. Strong fortifications were at once begun, for which heavy details were made on the troops of General Stevens' Brigade, who soon experienced much sickness from fatigue, and the process of acclimation to the delightful but malarious climate of a southern coast. One month later General Sherman resolved to occupy a point farther inland, upon the net work of islands which the capture of Port Royal Entrance, on the 7th of November, had made accessible to the Union gun-boats. General Stevens was detailed with his brigade for this purpose. The pleasant town of Beaufort was taken possession of, and occupied as headquarters. The chief military duty of the troops, for the next five or six months, consisted in picketing Barnwell's and Port Royal islands, on the Coosaw, across which on the main land, upon the "Shell Road" leading to Charleston, a Rebel force was stationed, covering the approaches to the railroad connecting Charleston and Savannah. The town of Beaufort, with Port Royal and all the adjacent islands, had been deserted by the white population since the battle of November 7th. To repress the boldness of the enemy in his hostile demonstrations at Port Royal Ferry, on the morning of the 1st of January, 1862, General Stevens, with a force of infantry and artillery, acting in conjunction with two gun boats, crossed the Coosaw, drove the enemy from his unfinished earthworks, and returned on the following day to the ferry without loss. During the occupancy of Beaufort and while at Hilton Head, many sickened, and some died, among them Lieutenant James L. Banks, of company F.

General Hunter, who had now relieved General Sherman in command of the Department, undertook the reduction of Charleston. On the 1st of June General Stevens, with the Round Heads, Highlanders, and the Eighth Michigan, proceeded through Stono Inlet to James Island, effecting a landing near Legareville. Five companies, A, F, D, I, and H, of the Round Heads, were on the advance vessel with General Stevens, the six remaining companies, under Colonel Leasure, following immediately after. Companies D and H seized the village, while the remaining forces moved up the island. The enemy was driven from his works and all his shore batteries captured. Two heavy guns were subsequently taken in the interior of the island by companies A, F, and I, and brought in. The regiment lost in this engagement about twenty killed and wounded. Captain Cline, of company F, and fifteen men, were captured while skirmishing without proper supports. Until the 15th, the regiment was engaged in erecting forts and in performing guard duty, and was almost constantly under fire from the enemy's forts, lying in the meanwhile under shelter tents in a low marsh, barely above tide water, and in constant expectation of being attacked.

At evening on the 15th of June, the troops upon the island were ordered to be in readiness early on the following morning to attack the enemy's works at the Tower Fort, near Secessionville, a strong earthwork held by the Rebel Colonel Lamar with a strong force, and commanding the approaches to Charleston by the James Island causeway. General Stevens was to attack, and General Wright to support on the left, and if need be, assault the work on the north. Colonel Leasure was placed in command of a brigade composed of his own, the Seventy-ninth and Forty-sixth New York. At two o'clock on the morning of the 16th the troops moved out for the attack. An unaccountable delay occurred, and the attacking party was not formed until broad daylight. Colonel Fenton's Brigade, which led the assaulting column, was swept and broken by a destructive fire, and Colonel Leasure's, which supported it, was soon in the forefront. After a severe contest, lasting nearly an hour, during which a number of both the Highlander and the Round Head regiments forced their way into the fort, Colonel Benham, in chief command, ordered a retreat. The narrow neck of ground over which the troops must advance was barely sufficient to deploy one regiment, and this was swept by the guns of the fort and from the rifle-pits and defences in the rear. Of the four hundred and twenty-one officers and men of the regiment who went into the fight, one officer, Lieutenant Samuel J. Morrow, and eight enlisted men were killed, two officers and thirty men wounded, and six missing. General Stevens, in his official report, says: "Colonel Fenton, in command of the First Brigade, used every exertion to throw the Eighth Michigan as far to the right as possible, and to bring on, in support, the Seventh Connecticut, and the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts; but the terrible fire of grape and musketry from the enemy's works cut the two former regiments in two, the right going to the right and the left to the left, whither, finally, the whole of the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts took its position, and where they were joined, with scarcely an interval of time, by the One Hundredth Pennsylvania and the Forty-sixth New York, of Leasure's Brigade. These regiments had been brought up with great promptness and energy by Colonel Leasure, and the right of the One Hundredth had pushed up to, and joined the Seventy-ninth in the charge. It was during this brief period, of less than one-half hour—from five to half-past five o'clock—that the greater portion of the casualties occurred. * * * I must express my profound sense of the intrepid bearing and soldierly conduct of my brigade commanders, Colonels Leasure and Fenton, who did everything that commanders could do to lead their respective brigades to the attack; and it is mainly due to their exertions that their lines of battle were maintained throughout the action."* Lieutenant Jefferson Justice, serving upon the staff of General Stevens, and Lieutenant S. G. Leasure, Assistant Adjutant General to the brigade, were commended for their gallantry. After the battle, the hospitals, crowded with the wounded, stood in urgent need of immediate surgical aid. Colonel Leasure, whose profession was that of medicine and surgery, at once volunteered, and rendered most valuable assistance to the young surgeons in charge.

Operations against Charleston having been suspended, an evacuation of the island was ordered, and on the 4th of July the brigade returned to Hilton Head, where, among the accumulated mails, were the commissions for the officers, from Governor Curtin, and an order declaring the Round Head Regiment the One Hundredth of the line. Lieutenant Colonel Armstrong, who had been in a feeble state of health from disease contracted in the service in Mexico, aggravated by a semi-tropical climate, was forced to resign, and was succeeded by Major Leckey, Captain Matthew A. Dawson being promoted to Major. On the 13th, the brigade returned to Beaufort, and soon after its arrival there was ordered to Virginia, whither it proceeded on the ocean steamer Merrimac, then on her trial trip. It went into camp at Newport News, where it was visited by a messenger from Governor Curtin, bearing the State colors, which were presented to the regiment by General Stevens, and were received in a patriotic speech by Colonel Leasure. On the 4th of August, the regiment was moved by transport to Acquia Creek, and thence by rail to Fredericksburg, where the troops under General Stevens from South Carolina, and those from North Carolina, under General Burnside, were united, and were placed under the command of General Reno, subsequently known as the Ninth Corps. Pope's army of Northern Virginia, consisting of the corps of Banks, Sigel, and M'Dowell, holding the left bank of the Rapidan, was threatened by the concentrated rebel army, and all available forces were being pushed on to his assistance. On the 13th, Stevens moved forward, and at Raccoon Ford was brought to a stand to dispute the passage of the enemy. After holding the position for three days, General Reno, who had now come up with the balance of his corps, having discovered that the enemy, in greatly superior numbers, was in his front, decided to withdraw, and at mid-night of the 19th, leaving the ford heavily picketed, retired to the line of the Rappahannock, crossing at Ely's Ford.

Then commenced a series of marches and counter-marches, disputing the passage of the fords of the Rappahannock, which continued until Stonewall Jackson made his famous move to Manassas Junction, in the rear of the Union army, when Reno's Corps started in pursuit, being joined on the way by the division of Kearny. From Greenwich the command followed to the old Bull Run battle ground, where it encamped on the evening of the 28th. At four o'clock on the following morning it moved forward, and after passing through rocky and wooded by-ways, forded Bull Run and debouched into the open ground to the south of Centreville. Here, about two hundred Union soldiers, captured and paroled by Jackson, were met, who gave information of the proximity of the rebel force. At eight o'clock, Stevens' Division was divided, one brigade, under Colonel Christ, being sent to the support of Kearny, one under Colonel Farnsworth, to support Milroy, and the third, under Colonel Leasure, to the assistance of Sigel. General Stevens remained with Colonel Leasure, remarking that "it would be the fighting brigade that day." It was composed of the One Hundredth, under Colonel Leckey, and four companies of the Forty-sixth New York, under Colonel Rosa, the remaining five companies of this regiment being detached for train guards.

At half-past ten A. M., when Sigel, who had borne the brunt of battle since early morn, was nearly outflanked, and the enemy was preparing a new attack against his centre, Kearny's and Stevens' divisions came to his aid. By direction of General Stevens, Lieutenant Benjamin's Battery of twenty-pounder Parrott's relieved Captain Dilger's Battery, on the crest of a hill, immediately on the left of the Warrenton Turnpike, and simultaneously Colonel Leasure's two regiments were deployed in line of battle for its support. The enemy was checked, and companies A, F, D, I, and M, of the One Hundredth were sent forward as skirmishers, taking position in the valley a quarter of a mile in advance, and keeping up a galling fire, Benjamin's guns in the meantime throwing shot and shell over their heads. The enemy seemed determined to carry that position, and at one time five batteries were concentrating their fire upon it. But Benjamin steadily held his ground until his ammunition began to fail him. In taking position, one of his caissons, well filled, had been accidentally overturned and abandoned, at a point about two hundred yards to the left and front of his present position, much exposed to the enemy's fire. Company G, Captain S. H. Brown, was ordered to bring it up. With intrepid daring it was led under the enemy's fire, and brought the heavily laden caisson, now sorely needed, safely off. Benjamin now increased his fire, and soon silenced a number of the enemy's guns. But one of his own had been struck by a solid shot and rendered useless, and another, by the premature explosion of a shell, had been disabled, and still another had lost nearly all its men. But until his ammunition was all spent, the remaining guns were kept in play. They were then withdrawn, and soon after the only remaining division of Sigel, on the left, fell back. Stevens was then ordered to retire. In the face of a terrible fire, now re-doubled, it was with difficulty that the skirmishers could be withdrawn, but was successfully accomplished under the direction of Lieutenant Gilleland. The enemy, now no longer deterred by the battery's fire, moved heavy masses of infantry obliquely in front of its late position, across the Warrenton Turnpike, and gained a most important position in a piece of wood, where the heaviest fighting occurred in the after part of the day, in which, with other troops, the One Hundredth suffered fearful loss. Leasure's Brigade had not retired a quarter of a mile, when it was ordered to the support of Roemer's Battery, on the north side of the turnpike, in an orchard somewhat to the rear of the former position. It was now nearly night, and the troops had suffered severely. They had scarcely reached their position, when an order came from Reno directing Stevens to support Kearny, who was enveloped in the woods to the right, on the line of the abandoned track of the Gap Railroad. Stevens had but this small brigade, the rest of his division having been ordered from him early in the day; but no time was to be lost, and moving off by the right flank at double quick, Colonel Leasure put his command in position for a charge. At that instant General Kearny came dashing up and demanded of Stevens where his troops were. Stevens pointed to the barely five hundred that stood about him. In his abrupt way, Kearny asked if they would fight. "Yes," said Stevens, with an oath, "these are my Round Heads." Dropping his bridle rein, with an impetuous gesture, in the direction of the enemy, with his only arm, he said to Colonel Leasure, "Sweep everything before you." Companies A and B of the One Hundredth were thrown forward as skirmishers, and the line quickly put in motion towards the low wooded ground where the enemy lay concealed. As they advanced, artillery and infantry were opened upon them, which told fearfully on their already shattered ranks. As the line approached, a well directed fire was poured upon the enemy, before which he recoiled. At this juncture an aid from General Kearny came up, and informed Colonel Leasure that the enemy was occupying a cut in the old Gap Road a short distance to the front, and to the left of the position he then held. Obliquing to the left, the line charged, and as the enemy scrambled up the opposite bank of the cut, it poured in a destructive fire and seized the abandoned position. Soon the enemy opened a heavy fire. General Stevens' horse and that of his orderly were both killed. Seeing that it was useless to attempt to hold the position against the overwhelming force that was bearing down upon him, he ordered Colonel Leasure to fall back before the way was completely cut off. The order was accordingly given, and as he was moving, the Colonel had his horse shot under him, and himself received a painful wound. Of the four hundred and fifty who had joined in this last charge, but one hundred and ninety-eight came back unhurt. Captains William F. Templeton, Simeon H. Brown, James S. Van Gorden, and Lieutenants Philo P. Rayen and E. J. R. Spencer were killed or mortally wounded, and Lieutenants John P. Blair and Thomas H. Curt were severely wounded.

Taking up a new line, the command was soon after joined by the other brigades of the division, and rested on its arms during the night. Colonel Leasure and Major Dawson having both been wounded and sent to hospital, the command of the brigade devolved on Lieutenant Colonel Leckey, that of the regiment on Captain James E. Cornelius. Early on the morning of the 30th, the battle was renewed, and continued, with varying success, during the day; but the Union army was finally forced to retire before the overwhelming numbers of the enemy, and at night fell back to Centreville.

The following day was the Sabbath. The fight was not renewed. Lee was too cautious to attack Pope on the heights of Centreville, but ordered Jackson, with his corps, to pass around the Union army, and attempt to cut its communications with Washington. The objective point of the movement was Fairfax Court House, but Jackson's advance was met and hurled back at Ox Hill, near Chantilly, while yet several miles distant from that place. Pope, aware of Jackson's movement, had on Monday, September 1st, massed several corps in the vicinity of Fairfax Court House, and pushed Reno northward, toward Chantilly, in the direction of Jackson's advance. The One Hundredth had been hastily marched out of bivouac, and now at five o'clock formed, advancing in column through a meadow, then a wood, the Forty-sixth New York following, and the Seventy-ninth New York skirmishing in advance. Emerging from the wood into a field but partially cleared, the column encountered a rapid fire of musketry from the enemy. General Stevens, dismounting, hastily formed his lines of battle in person, and promptly drove the enemy back beyond the partially cleared ground, and into the edge of a field of corn. In these two fields the battle was fought. Jackson's entire corps was in line of battle in front, Reno's Corps, now reduced to two slender divisions, being much inferior in numbers. General Kearny, however, with a part of his division, was in the rear. In fifteen minutes after the action began, General Stevens, while forming the Seventy-ninth New York in line of battle, was instantly killed by a musket ball in the head. Shortly after, a furious rain began to fall, accompanied with thunder and lightning. By this time General Birney, with four regiments of Kearny's Division, had been ordered in, and the enemy was driven back still farther through the corn. General Kearny, riding up to the One Hundredth, now without ammunition, asked support for a battery. The men responded with a cheer. The battery (Randolph's) was placed in position and brought to bear over the heads of Birney's men, though the darkness prevented any accuracy of aim. A few minutes later General Kearny, while reconnoitring, rode into the enemy's lines, and asking, "What troops are these," discovered his mistake, but received a fatal bullet after he had turned his horse's head and was galloping away. As he did not return, General Birney, presuming he had been captured, assumed command and gallantly maintained the action, pushing forward two fresh regiments, the Thirty-eighth New York and Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania. Our troops remained in possession of the field and kindled fires, which the cold rain had rendered especially necessary. The action was now over. Before day the field was evacuated by our victorious regiments, which with the entire army fell back upon Washington. Captain Cornelius, in command of the regiment, was severely wounded, and after suffering for a long time was discharged on account thereof. Captain R. J. Ross and Lieutenant Samuel R. Grace were wounded. The loss was two killed and thirty-four wounded.

The invasion of Maryland followed close upon the defeat of Pope in Virginia. In the battle of South Mountain, on the 14th of September, the regiment participated, and in the charge up the mountain suffered severely, losing eight killed and twenty-eight wounded. In the battle of Antietam, on the 17th, having lost nearly all its line officers, it was not actively engaged. After advancing as skirmishers until the battle had opened, it was relieved and held in reserve during the rest of the day. Its loss was one killed and four wounded. On the 18th, Morell's Division of Porter's Corps relieved Reno's late command, the latter retiring, and on the 19th encamping near the mouth of Antietam Creek. On the 11th of October the brigade, which now consisted of the One Hundredth, the Forty-fifth Pennsylvania, and Thirty-sixth Massachusetts, was sent to Frederick City to intercept the rebel General Stuart on his raid to Chambersburg, but was unsuccessful. Soon afterwards Colonel Leasure, who had now returned from hospital, was sent to Washington, by General Burnside, to bring up the absentees and convalescents of the Ninth Corps, assembled in camp near the city. About four thousand were thus added to its strength, two hundred of whom belonged to the One Hundredth Regiment. In November, soon after the return of the army to Virginia, General W. W. Burns was assigned to the command of the division, and Colonel Leasure, who had temporarily held command, returned to his brigade.

On the 19th of November, the corps arrived opposite Fredericksburg and went into camp. On the following day the regiment was sent to construct a corduroy road upon the way leading to Belle Plain, the base of supply, returning on the 25th. The Ninth Corps now formed part of the right grand division of the army, commanded by General Sumner. On the 12th of December the regiment crossed the river, and with the corps occupied the city of Fredericksburg. Burns' Division was assigned to the support of Hancock, and was afterwards sent to the assistance of Franklin, on the left. During the progress of the battle on the 13th, the division lay in reserve awaiting the order to advance, which was momentarily expected. At midnight, Colonel Leasure was directed to move his brigade to position on the left of General Stoneman, which was promptly done, but at daylight returned again to its former position. The battle was not renewed on the 14th. At dusk, on the 15th, Colonel Leasure was ordered to send his most reliable skirmish regiment to report to General Sumner. The One Hundredth was selected. It was pushed forward towards the enemy, and deployed to cover the retreat. But so quietly and skilfully was the withdrawal accomplished, that the suspicions of the enemy were not aroused, and the troops all crossed in safety without molestation. Near the close of the year, Lieutenant Colonel Leckey resigned, and was succeeded by Major Dawson. Captain James H. Cline was subsequently promoted to Major.

Early in the year 1863, General Burnside was placed in command of the Department of the Ohio, and two divisions of his old corps were ordered to Kentucky to report to him. Rendezvousing at Fortress Monroe, these divisions proceeded via Baltimore, Parkersburg, and Cincinnati to Lexington, Kentucky, where the One Hundredth arrived on the morning of the 28th of March. After remaining in camp a week, the regiment moved to Camp Dick Robinson, and was subsequently at Middleburg and Columbia. While at the latter place General Welsh was assigned to the command of the division, and the brigade was re-organized and made to comprise the One Hundredth Pennsylvania, Seventy-ninth New York, Second, Eighth, and Twentieth Michigan.

Early in June the corps was ordered to the support of Grant at Vicksburg, and embarking at Louisville upon transports proceeded to Young's Point, on the Mississippi, but shortly after returned to Snyder's Bluff, and debarking, marched to Milldale Church, in rear of the besieging army, and took position facing towards the Big Black, where the rebel General Johnston had collected a large force, with the design of raising the siege and relieving the beleaguered garrison. As soon as the forces were settled in camp, details were made for fatigue duty in felling timber and intrenching the position. On the 29th the command moved some ten miles further out and took position at Flower Hill Church, to guard the fords of the Big Black, where it remained until the ever memorable 4th of July, when Vicksburg was surrendered. General Sherman immediately moved with a part of Grant's forces and the Ninth Corps to attack Johnston, who had fallen back to Jackson. Bridging the Big Black, the First Division crossed at four o'clock on the afternoon of the 4th. On the 10th, the advance entered the enemy's picket lines near the Insane Asylum, just out of the city. Line of battle was formed, and advanced to within three hundred yards of the enemy's works. The brigade held the extreme left, its left resting on the Pearl River, where it was exposed to an enfilading fire from the enemy's batteries. This position was held until the night of the 13th, when the brigade was relieved by the Fourth Brigade. The loss in the command during this time was considerable, the men being obliged to remain prostrate upon the ground, many a poor fellow being struck dead where he lay. On the morning of the 17th, it was discovered that the enemy had evacuated, when the city was quickly occupied by the Union troops. On the morning of the 18th, the brigade marched to Madison Station, where it was engaged in destroying the railroad. Upon its return, it moved with the corps back to its old camp at Milldale. The campaign, though short, had been sharp, the heat of the weather added to the fatigue and anxiety experienced, and worse than all, the abominable water of the Yazoo and the Big Black, telling fearfully upon the health and spirits of the men.

From Vicksburg the corps, now under command of General Parke, was ordered to East Tennessee. Moving by boat to Cairo, the regiment proceeded by rail to Cincinnati, and thence to Camp Nelson, in Kentucky. While here, many of the men were attacked with a fever of a malarious congestive type, of which many died, among them Commissary Sergeant, James Henderson. When the division started on the 25th of September for East Tennessee, one fourth of the men in the regiment were left in hospital, and many of those who moved with the column were greatly enfeebled by disease. At Blue

Spring the enemy was met, and a brisk engagement ensued, in which his intrenched position was carried and his forces scattered. From Knoxville, to which place the troops soon after returned, the division marched to Lenoir Station, on the East Tennessee and Virginia Railroad, where the regiment went into camp and erected comfortable quarters. It was hardly settled before Leasure's Brigade was ordered, by telegram from General Burnside, at Knoxville, to proceed thither without delay, the enemy having attacked and captured some troops of the Twenty-third Corps, and further trouble being anticipated. It was evening when the order was received, and at day-break on the following morning it had arrived and reported for duty to the commanding general. Its services, however, were not needed, and for four days, from the 6th to the 10th of November, the troops were held in waiting, exposed to intense cold, without shelter tents. At the end of that time it returned to its camp at Lenoir, but on the morning of the 14th it was ordered to return, with all possible dispatch, to Knoxville, Longstreet having crossed the Tennessee at Kingston, and now threatening to cut off the troops south of the city. Seven companies of the One Hundredth were detailed as escort to the division train, which was immediately put in motion, and the remaining three, A, F, and D, under Captain Hamilton, were detailed to remain and destroy government property at Lenoir. The Union troops reached Campbell's Station first, and a stand was made which enabled the trains to reach Knoxville in safety. Entrenchments were hastily thrown up for the defence of the city, and on the morning of the 17th, the troops had all arrived and were in position. Longstreet laid siege and closely invested the place. Frequent charges and assaults were delivered by the enemy, but without advantage, and on the morning of the 29th, a grand assault on Fort Saunders, the principal work, defended by the First Division. With determined bravery his troops advanced, some of them reaching the ditch in its front, but were finally repulsed with great slaughter. The siege was continued until the 4th of December, when, learning that General Sherman was coming up on his rear with a strong detachment from Grant's army at Chattanooga, Longstreet retreated towards Virginia, and the garrison, which was suffering for want of provision, was relieved.

On the 9th of December, the command marched to near Rutledge, and on the 18th to Blaine's Cross Roads. On the 1st of January, 1864, while subsisting on less than two ears of corn a day per man, the entire regiment, with the exception of twenty-seven, re-enlisted to the number of three hundred and sixty-six, for a second term of three years, and immediately started for home on a veteran furlough. The mid-winter march over the Cumberland Mountains was very severe, many of the men being bare-foot and without adequate clothing, no supply trains having reached Knoxville during the continuance of the siege. At Cincinnati the regiment was paid, and on the 8th of February reached Pittsburg, where the men were dismissed to return to their homes.

On the 8th of March the veterans rendezvoused at Camp Copeland, near Pittsburg, and with them a sufficient number of recruits, who had been gathered in during the brief furlough, to raise its combined strength to nine hundred and seventy-seven men. A few days later, the regiment proceeded to Annapolis, Maryland, the rendezvous of the Ninth Corps, where it was brigaded with the Twenty-first Massachusetts, and the Third Maryland, forming the Second Brigade of the First Division, and Colonel Leasure placed in command. Leaving Annapolis, the brigade reached Bealton Station on the 2d of May, and having moved with Grant's army to the Wilderness, on the night of the 5th was placed on picket. At daylight on the following morning it was relieved and ordered to duty as guard to the corps artillery. The Ninth Corps was an independent command, and was regarded as a reserve to the army; but the enemy attacking in great force, it was ordered in, and the brigade, which was in rear of the artillery, was directed to pass it, and report to General Hancock, of the Second Corps. It was posted by General Mott, of that corps, in breast-works thrown up near the Brock Road; but soon afterwards, Colonel Leasure was directed to lead his brigade over the works, into the dense woods in front, find the enemy's position, and if possible, attack him in flank. The first onset of the day was now over, and each side seemed content to rest on its arms and re-adjust the shattered lines. As the brigade moved over the recently contested ground, the dead and wounded of both sides lay thickly strewn on every hand. The forest had been fired, the flames, consuming and devouring the dry leaves, was rapidly approaching them. The skirmish line, which was a few paces in front of the line of battle, advancing at a trail arms, discovered the enemy approaching, but before the command could deliver its fire, his line about faced and moved rapidly out of sight. The brigade immediately changed front to the left, and marched to meet a flank movement of the enemy in that direction, but on discovering our troops advancing, he again fell back, and it moved on in the original direction. After pushing a half mile through the dense underbrush, it was discovered that the enemy had retired to his earth-works, where he was awaiting an attack. The object of the reconnoissance having been accomplished, it returned and was warmly complimented by General Hancock for its efficient service. Much exhausted, it was led back a little in rear of the line of breast-works, where it rested. At four o'clock in the afternoon, the enemy suddenly opened a furious attack upon the line a little to the left of the point where the brigade was lying. In a short time the breast-work, which was made of dry logs and rails, was fired by the enemy's shells, and instantly blazed up, making the ground untenable, and the troops occupying them fell back. Seeing this, other troops further to the right were seized with a panic, and retreated in confusion, the enemy occupying the abandoned works. At this juncture, Colonel Leasure ordered the One Hundredth, and the Twenty-first Massachusetts, to charge, and following up with the Third Maryland, routed the enemy and re-captured the lost works, securing many prisoners and several stands of colors. The losses in the One Hundredth were fortunately light; Captain J. H. Pentecost was severely wounded in the final charge. The brigade remained in possession of the captured works until the following afternoon, when it was relieved and re-joined the division.

On the 9th, the corps crossed the Ny River, and took position in front of Spottsylvania Court House, where General Stevenson, in command of the division, was killed. Colonel Leasure was directed to assume command and push the enemy back towards the Court House, which was accomplished with only small loss. On the 12th, the fighting was renewed, and continued during the entire day and far into the night, falling heavily upon the Ninth Corps, the One Hundredth Regiment sustaining considerable loss. In the severe engagements at the North Anna, on the 28th of May, and at Cold Harbor, on the 2d of June, the regiment participated, and in the latter, Lieutenant David J. Gilfillan was killed.

After crossing the James, the regiment was warmly engaged in the series of battles in front of Petersburg, prelude to the siege, in which Captain Leander C. Morrow was killed, and Lieutenant Colonel Matthew M. Dawson was mortally wounded. The mine, which was exploded on the 30th of July, had been excavated within the lines of the Ninth Corps, and in the movements which were immediately inaugurated the regiment participated, in which Captain Walter C. Oliver, and Lieutenants Richard P. Craven and Samuel G. Leasure were killed, and Major Thomas J. Hamilton, in command of the regiment, was mortally wounded and taken prisoner.

On the 19th of August, the enemy attacked the Union forces while occupying a position upon the Weldon Railroad, and pushing his way through between the lines of the Fifth and Ninth Corps, achieved some success. In this encounter the One Hundredth was engaged, and again on the 21st, when the enemy made a determined effort to dislodge the Fifth Corps, but was finally foiled in his attempts. On the 30th of September the lines were again extended to the left, and at a point near Poplar Spring Church two strong forts, a mile and a half of rifle-pits, and two guns, were captured. The enemy finally flanked a division of the Ninth Corps, and a severe struggle ensued. The regiment fortunately sustained only small loss. In the movement upon Hatcher's Run, on the 27th of October, it was again engaged, in which some prisoners were taken, but the enemy was found strongly posted. During the winter, the regiment remained in quarters with the corps. At the moment when the Union forces were about to move on the spring campaign, the rebel leader massed his troops, and before light on the morning of the 25th of March, made a sudden attack upon Fort Steadman, with the design of breaking the lines and destroying vast military stores at City Point. The fort was captured and considerable advantage gained, but was promptly met by forces of the Ninth Corps, and the effect of the blow inflicted quickly repaired. In this encounter the One Hundredth was engaged, and Lieutenant Colonel Joseph H. Pentecost was killed. The final assault upon the city of Petersburg, on the 2d of April, closed the long list of engagements in which the regiment, during its four years of service, had participated. It soon after returned to City Point, and thence to Washington, where, on the 24th of July, it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIRST REGIMENT.

SEVEN companies, independently recruited during the early part of the fall of 1861, in the counties of Allegheny, Beaver, and Lawrence, were brought together at Camp Fremont, near Pittsburg, where, under the command of Joseph H. Wilson, of Beaver, who had served successively as Captain, Major, Colonel, and Major General of militia, and who had received authority to recruit a regiment, they remained until the last of October, when they were ordered to Camp Curtin, near Harrisburg. They were here joined by three additional companies, recruited in the counties of Tioga, Bedford, and Adams, and a regimental organization was effected with the following field officers: Joseph H. Wilson, Colonel; David B. Morris, of Pittsburg, Lieutenant Colonel; Joseph S. Hoard, of Tioga county, Major. The men were carefully drilled from the time of their arrival in camp, but it was not until past the middle of February, 1862, that they received their arms. On the 26th, the colors were presented by Governor Curtin, and on the following day the regiment departed for Washington. Upon its arrival it went into camp at Meridian Hill, and was assigned to Keim's Brigade.* The old style Harper's Ferry muskets, with which it had been armed, were here exchanged for Austrian rifles.

On the 28th of March, Casey's Division, to which Keim's Brigade had been assigned, proceeded to Alexandria, whence it moved, by transports, to the Peninsula, and went into camp near Newport News. The army, as soon as assembled in force, advanced upon Yorktown and commenced the operations of a siege. On the 16th of April, Keim's Brigade was ordered to the front and joined the division at Camp Winfield Scott. Here the regiment was employed for some time in building corduroy roads, which were made to stretch in every direction over all that marshy neighborhood. On the morning of the 4th of May, it was discovered that the enemy had fled, abandoning his works, and the army was immediately ordered forward in pursuit. The One Hundred and First passed the enemy's deserted fortifications, and moved on by the way of Burnt Ordinary, bivouacking for the night six miles east of Williamsburg. Early on the following morning General Hooker engaged the enemy in front of that place. The regiment came upon the field at half past four P. M. It was at once formed in line and moved to the front, where it was held under fire as a reserve until the close of the engagement. Its position fell opposite Fort Magruder, and was consequently exposed to heavy fire of shot and shell. Fortunately it was partially shielded by a strip of woods, and had only six or eight wounded. The fighting ceased at dark, when the regiment was thrown forward to the left, into the woods, and was kept in line, under a cold drenching rain, until eleven P. M., when it was discovered that the enemy was again retreating.

On the morning of the 6th, the One Hundred and First, with a few other regiments, was ordered to the south bank of the York River, but on the following morning was ordered to return, and moving along the line of the rebel works to Williamsburg, passed through the town and proceeded six miles westward, on the Richmond Road, following the line of the rebel retreat, and holding the advance of the army. Moving forward by easy marches, and passing on the way New Kent Court House, it reached the Chickahominy on the 21st. On the 22d, companies D and I were sent across the river to dig rifle-pits and slash timber, and on the 23d the troops crossed, the One Hundred and First being with the advance, and halted a few miles west of the river. On the 24th, a spirited artillery engagement took place near Savage Station, and the regiment, with some other infantry troops, was sent to the support of our batteries, but did not become engaged. In the meantime, large numbers of the regiment had sickened, and been left at various points on the march up the Peninsula, many of whom died, while others were so weakened in constitution as to be no longer fit for service. Among these victims was Colonel Wilson. He was stricken with fever soon after leaving Williamsburg, and was left at Roper's Church, where, on the 30th, he died. He was succeeded in command by Lieutenant Colonel Morris. General Keim was also disabled by disease, of which he also died, and the command of the brigade devolved temporarily upon Colonel Howell, of the Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania, but subsequently upon General Wessells.

On the 26th of May, the brigade was moved up to Seven Pines, and on the 29th to Fair Oaks. Upon its arrival all available forces were at once put to digging rifle-pits, the enemy being in its immediate front, with whom shots were occasionally exchanged, by which company B lost one man. On the 30th, the entire regiment was upon the picket line, company B engaging the enemy. At eleven A. M. on the 31st, a few shots from his artillery passed over the regiment, and announced the opening of the battle. At the first discharge the division was recalled from work upon abattis and rifle-pits, and ordered under arms. Hart's Battery occupied the principal work, a redoubt, the Eighty-fifth New York holding the rifle-pits on its left, the Eighty-fifth Pennsylvania on its right, and the One Hundred and First a position on the right of these regiments. The dispositions had scarcely been made, when the battle opened in earnest, the enemy attacking in heavy force on the centre and both wings of the division, a brisk musketry fire extending along the two opposing lines. Against overpowering forces, and until a large proportion of its numbers had been stricken down, this small division, thrust out in advance of the whole army, and receiving the whole weight of the enemy's blow, held its ground. But outflanked and threatened with utter annihilation, it finally was forced back to the second line of works, occupied by Couch, where it was again rallied and remained until the close of the fight. In that desperate struggle every third man in the regiment was either killed or wounded; but the slaughter which it inflicted was terrible. Colonel Morris had ordered his men at the opening of the fight to aim at the waist-belt of the foe, and as he had come up within eighty yards, the fire was most effective, General Wessells declaring it unprecedented. In the heat of the battle, the enemy succeeded in partially flanking the regiment on the right, when, by a timely discovery of the movement, a charge was ordered, which completely frustrated his design. Colonel Morris was wounded early in the fight and carried from the field, when the command devolved on Captain Charles W. May. In the progress of the battle, and after having been twice rallied, General Kearny rode up to the regiment and called out to its commander, "for G—'s sake re-gain the woods in front and the day is ours." Inspirited by the word of the commander, the men pressed forward and took the coveted ground, but soon found themselves well nigh surrounded, the only alternative left to them being to fight their way back again, which they succeeded in doing.

After the battle of Fair Oaks, Wessells' Brigade was ordered to the south of the Williamsburg Road, to a point near White Oak Swamp, where it remained, engaged in guard and picket duty, until the opening of the Seven Days' battles. When the army was put on the march for the James, the regiment was engaged, at intervals, on detached service until the close of the fighting at Malvern Hill. In the withdrawal of the army to Harrison's Landing, Wessells' Brigade was upon the rear guard, and had frequent encounters with rebel cavalry by the way. Upon the evacuation of the Peninsula, Keyes was left at Fortress Monroe. Here the regiment went into camp, and was principally employed in drill and discipline. On the 18th of September, Wessells' Brigade was ordered to Suffolk, the enemy having made a demonstration upon that place. Moving by transport to Norfolk, the regiment proceeded thence by rail, and reached Suffolk the same evening. In the meantime, Major Hoard had been promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, but owing to ill health was compelled to resign, and in the absence, on account of wounds, of Colonel Morris, who had received his promotion on the 1st of July, Captain May held command of the regiment. While at Suffolk, the regiment was kept busy with fatigue duty upon the fortifications, and in frequent reconnoissances to the Blackwater, General Peck, who was now in command of the division, being intent upon providing for the safety of his command, and keeping well advised of the whereabouts of the enemy. Colonel Morris re-joined the regiment while here, with Lieutenant Colonel Armour, who had been successively promoted from Captain and Major; but owing to the unhealed wounds of the former, and injuries subsequently sustained by the latter, the command devolved on Major Alexander W. Taylor, promoted from Captain of company H.

On the 4th of December, General Wessells was ordered to proceed with his brigade to Newbern, to reinforce General Foster, who was organizing his forces for a movement upon Goldsboro, designed as a diversion in favor of Burnside, at Fredericksburg. Marching to a point on the Chowan River, near Gatesville, it embarked upon transports and arrived at Newbern on the 9th. On the 11th, Wessells took the advance, and skirmished lightly with the enemy's cavalry as he proceeded, until the evening of the 13th, when he fell in with rebel troops, and drove them across West Creek, capturing two pieces of artillery. On the following morning, Sunday, the 14th, the enemy was found posted in front of Kingston, along the south bank of the Neuse, and was attacked soon after sunrise by the pickets of the One Hundred and First. The only approach open was by an almost impassable swamp. Struggling through, the troops attacked and drove the enemy from his well chosen ground, pushed him across the Neuse, and drove him in confusion through the town. The bridge had been prepared for firing, and as soon as he was over he applied the torch, leaving loaded muskets upon it, which exploded as the flames reached them. A missile from one of these mortally wounded Colonel Gray, of the Ninety-sixth New York. The fire was soon checked, however, and the Union forces passed over. With the exception of a slight encounter at White Hall, no serious resistance was met until the command reached Goldsboro. By mid-day of the 17th, the regiment arrived near the bridge of the Wilmington and Weldon Railroad, the enemy in considerable force on the north side of the river having been reinforced by troops brought from South Carolina and all available points. The artillery at once opened, under fire of which a party proceeded to the bridge and applied the torch, the flames instantly leaping up and enveloping the whole structure. This accomplished, Foster's forces began to retire; whereupon, the enemy crossed the river and attempted to capture a battery, left upon the field. Wessells' Brigade was at once counter-marched. The artillery practice was rapid, but the shells were thrown over the heads of the Union infantry, and little injury was inflicted. Having little stomach for grape and canister the enemy withdrew, and the return march was resumed. The forest had been fired, and as the troops moved on the night march, the flames streaming up the tall pine trees, presented a majestic scene.

Upon the arrival of the command at Newbern, the regiment was sent to the south of the Trent, near the town, where it was quartered in Sibley tents during the winter months, principally engaged in drill and fatigue duty. A force, consisting of the One Hundred and First, and One Hundred and Third Pennsylvania, and a company of the Third New York Cavalry, all under command of Colonel Morris, was sent on the 7th of March, 1863, to Hyde county, to break up a band of guerrillas infesting that locality. Moving by transport to Swanquarter, it debarked, and marched through the suspected district, passing quite around Lake Mattimuskeet, and returned without discovering the whereabouts of the troublesome gang. On the 4th of April, the regiment joined in the movement for the relief of General Foster, and a small force shut up at Little Washington. It moved by water, but at a point nine miles below the town, the rebel works, commanding the river, were reached, when it was obliged to turn back, and retire to Newbern. An overland expedition for the same destination was undertaken on the very day of the arrival back of the first. At Swift Creek, the enemy was found with infantry and artillery prepared to dispute the passage. On the side by which the command approached, an almost impassable swamp stretched away above and below, which could only be crossed by a corduroy causeway, which was raked by his artillery. A force of infantry and artillery, of which the One Hundred and First formed part, was thrown to the front, and a sharp engagement ensued, which lasted for two hours. General Spinola, who was in command, regarding the opposition too formidable to be overcome by his force, withdrew, and returned again to Newbern. By this time General Wessells, who had been absent a short time, had returned, and Foster, having run the gauntlet of the river, himself headed a force, which fought its way through, and reached Little Washington, finally relieving the garrison.

Soon after his return Wessells was ordered with his brigade to Plymouth, near the mouth of the Roanoke River, and was put in command of the district. The troops were at once distributed about the village, and put to work repairing earth-works and building new ones. The One Hundred and First was posted at the lower part of the town, and was principally employed in fatigue, guard, and picket duty during the ensuing summer. Occasional expeditions, in which the whole or detachments of the regiment joined, were made into the neighboring country. One of these, which started on the 28th of June, in which companies D and I, Lieutenants Longenecker and Brown, participated, proved abortive by a fatal blunder of a company of the Twelfth New York Cavalry. On the 5th of July, the regiment was sent up the river, with the gun-boats, to Williamstown. The town was reached and the infantry skirmished through it, but found no enemy, and returned to camp. On the 26th a force of infantry and artillery, under command of Colonel Morris, was sent to Foster's Mills, for a diversion in favor of General Foster, who was moving for the destruction of the railroad bridge at Weldon. On the afternoon of the second day, the rebel pickets were encountered and driven, and at the mills a brisk skirmish ensued, in which the whole force was engaged. The fighting ceased with darkness, and as it was only designed for a diversion, the troops were withdrawn, and returned to Plymouth on the following day.

During the remaining part of the year 1863, and the early part of 1864, frequent encounters occurred with bands of the enemy, as they were met by detachments, which were frequently sent out to scour the country bordering on the Albemarle Sound and the Chowan River. In one of these, Lieutenant Helm, with company G, surprised the camp of a guerrilla band, and made the entire party prisoners, taking the leader from the chimney of the house, where he had his headquarters, whither he had hied for concealment and safety. The captives, who were brought safely into camp, outnumbered the captors.

In the month of March, the regiment was ordered to Newbern, where an attack was apprehended; but no enemy appearing, it returned and was at once dispatched to Roanoke Island, which was also thought to be in danger. After a few weeks' stay, during which the troops on the island were under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Taylor, it returned to its old camp-ground, near Plymouth. It had been for some time known that the enemy was busy at Hamilton, a point on the river above, in building an iron clad ram, with which to open and control the river and the sound below, and that a powerful land force was preparing to co-operate. Accordingly, General Wessells caused obstructions to be placed in the bed of the river, anchored torpedoes in the channel, and strengthened the earth-works, mounting a two hundred-pounder gun at the point where the works met the river above. A considerable part of the command was suffering from ague, and was in hospitals. Sunday, the 17th of April, was a beautiful spring day, and the troops, after the usual religious exercises, were reposing in quiet in the intrenchments, when, at four P. M., a few shots were heard, in rapid succession, from the pickets posted on the Washington Road. A detachment of cavalry sent out soon returned, bringing the intelligence that the enemy was advancing in force. It proved to be the rebel General Hoke, with a land force variously estimated from seven to fifteen thousand men. Fort Gray, upon the river bank, which commanded the passage, was the first object of attack, and upon this he opened with his artillery, the fort with the gun-boats replying, the ram, called the Albemarle, riding at anchor above, ready to pass down as soon as the fort was reduced. At night the firing ceased, but was resumed early on the morning of the 18th, the infantry mingling in the fray as the investment was more closely pressed. Soon his skirmishers made their appearance in front of the works below, and opened fire. The Bombshell, a small gun-boat, was struck by one of the enemy's land batteries during the forenoon and soon after sunk. At a little before sunset a heavy line of infantry emerged from the woods in front of the lower works, and sweeping away the Union skirmish line, occupied a fine eminence, on which he immediately planted several batteries. These were at once opened upon the town, the main force of the attack being directed upon Fort Williams, the headquarters of General Wessells. A transport, dispatched to Roanoke Island, returned at evening, bringing up all available forces, among them two hundred men of the One Hundred and First. By nightfall all the guns on both sides, from land and river, were in full play, and the fire, which had now become fearful, was kept up far into the night. A determined assault was made in the evening upon Fort Wessells, a detached work to the front and right of the town, and though defended with consummate skill and the most determined bravery, by a company of the Eighty-fifth New York, under Captain Nelson Chapin, which repulsed repeated charges, throwing hand grenades when the enemy came within reach, and thrusting them from the escarpment with bayonet when they attempted to scale the parapets, it was finally forced to yield, but not until the brave Captain had been mortally wounded. In the thick darkness, just before the dawn of day, the rebel ram, Albemarle, passing the obstructions in the river without injury, and eluding attack from Fort Gray, made for the gun-boats Southfield and Miami, soon sinking the former and causing the latter to withdraw down the stream. Towards evening of the 19th, it was discovered that the enemy was moving around, and massing on the left of the line, where, from paucity of numbers, the works were least protected. Detachments of the One Hundred and First were immediately sent to strengthen that part of the line. The enemy opened with his artillery and soon came forward in heavy force. After stubborn resistance, it was forced to yield to superior numbers, but fell back slowly, disputing the ground inch by inch. At a little before daylight of the 20th, the rebel artillery opened all along the line, the signal for the onset, and shortly after, a full brigade, which had been massed for a decisive move, charged upon the left, while demonstrations were made along the entire line. The shock was bravely met, and the guns at Conley and Compher redoubts were kept in full play until the rebel line had passed them and was already in the suburbs of the town. At Compher redoubt, companies D, I, G, B, and a part of K held their position until their stockade was knocked down, and the enemy was crowding into the works. At Conley redoubt, the handful of men left was withdrawn, when the work was no longer tenable, and made a stand without; but the enemy was already in possession of the streets in its rear, and after contesting the ground, street by street, the town was finally taken. But still the forces, holding a part of the works, including Fort Williams, held out. A third of the troops were by this time prisoners. The loyal North Carolinians and colored troops, after fighting bravely, now that all hope of successful defence was gone, made for the adjoining swamps, for they well knew their fate if they fell into the hands of their enemies. A truce of a few minutes followed and terms were offered, which General Wessells refused to accept. The guns again opened, the firing being kept up until eleven A. M., when the entire force was surrendered. "During the whole afternoon," says Adjutant Longenecker, "we could hear the crack of rebel rifles along the swamps, where they were hunting down the colored troops and loyal North Carolinians. I heard a rebel Colonel say, with an oath, that they intended to shoot every Buffalo (North Carolinian) and negro they found in our uniform." The loss in this engagement was five killed, twenty-four wounded, and two missing. Captain May and Lieutenant Brown were among the wounded. The entire regiment, with the exception of a few absent on furlough or detached service, fell into the hands of the enemy, including the following officers: Lieutenant Colonel A. W. Taylor, Adjutant J. H. Longenecker, Quartermaster Thomas King, Assistant Surgeon William Macpherson, Captains Bowers, Compher, Sheafer, Clark, Freeman, Mullin, Benner, and Dawson, and Lieutenants Davidson, Kirk, Morrow, Hippard, Conley, Werrick, Cubbison, Beegle, and Helm.

From Plymouth the prisoners, under strong guard, were marched to Tarboro, and thence taken by rail to Andersonville, Georgia. The enlisted men were here incarcerated, and the officers sent to Macon, where they were soon after joined by the Union officers from Libby and other prisons throughout the rebel dominions. They were subsequently moved, successively, to Savannah, Charleston, and Charlotte, and were finally exchanged at Wilmington, in March, 1865. Most of the officers of the One Hundred and First escaped, at various times, as their own daring and heroism prompted, and after incredible hardships and sufferings, hunted by cavalry and blood hounds, a part of them succeeded in reaching the Union lines, at far distant points, while others were captured and returned to prison, to suffer re-doubled torments in punishment of their temerity. Captains Bowers and Dawson, and Lieutenants Conley, Helm, and Davidson thus earned their freedom; but Captains Benner and Freeman, Lieutenants Beegle, and Hippard, and Adjutant Longenecker, less fortunate, were apprehended and returned to captivity. The enlisted men, with less opportunities of escape, were closely held at Andersonville until the latter part of the summer, when a part of them were taken to Millen and a few to Savannah, where some were exchanged. With the exception of a few retained at Andersonville, and who were afterwards sent north, via the Mississippi River, nearly all met at Florence, and were exchanged in the spring of 1865, at Wilmington, North Carolina, and sent to Annapolis, via the Atlantic Ocean and Fortress Monroe. All who were left were exchanged in March, 1865; but before the time of release came, over half had died.

When the attack opened upon Plymouth, the sick of the regiment were sent, by transport, to Roanoke Island. These, with a few officers and men who were absent with leave at the time, were formed into a detachment, under command of Lieutenant David M. Ramsey, and were placed on duty as a part of the garrison of Roanoke Island. To these were added, during the summer, one hundred recruits. As fast as exchanged the officers and men reported at Camp Parole, Annapolis, Maryland, and subsequently re-joined the detachment on Roanoke Island, where the regimental organization was revived. But still the companies were only skeletons. Accordingly, in March, eight new companies were assigned to it. These were, however, never consolidated with the original companies, and on the 25th of June, 1865, the regiment was mustered out of service at Newbern, North Carolina.

One Hundred and Second Regiment.

THE Thirteenth Regiment, from which the One Hundred and Second sprang, was mustered out of service on the 6th of August, 1861. Colonel Thomas A. Rowley, who had commanded the Thirteenth, having received authority from Hon. Simon Cameron, Secretary of War, to raise a regiment for three years' service, immediately commenced the work of recruiting at Pittsburg. The ranks were rapidly filled, but before it could be completed, there being a pressing need of troops at Washington, a detachment, consisting of five companies, was ordered forward, and departed on the 21st of August. Others followed until twelve full companies were in camp, and the regiment was organized with the following field officers: Thomas A. Rowley, Colonel; Joseph M. Kinkead, Lieutenant Colonel; John Poland, Major. Joseph Browne was appointed Adjutant.

The regiment remained during the winter with the army before Washington, and was thoroughly drilled. A detachment, under Captain Foster, consisting of companies A and D, was for a time posted at Great Falls, Maryland, and was engaged in guarding the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. It was assigned to Peck's Brigade,* of Smith's, subsequently Couch's, Division. On the 26th of March, 1862, the regiment embarked at Alexandria, and moved with the brigade to the Peninsula, whither most of the army had preceded it, and upon its arrival was ordered to the neighborhood of Warwick Court House, where, during the siege of Yorktown, it was employed upon the works and in guard and picket duty. When all was ready to move upon him, the enemy quietly abandoned his fortifications, retreating rapidly up the Peninsula, and the pursuit was at once commenced. At Williamsburg, where he had constructed some works, he made a stand. Early in the afternoon of Monday, May 5th, the One Hundred and Second came into position on the enemy's front, its left connecting with the Ninety-third. For nearly three hours the fighting was spirited, the enemy charging and pouring in a hot fire from the artillery in his works. But the ground was held, and at night the enemy again retreated. The regiment sustained severe loss in this engagement, its initial battle, having three killed and thirty-eight wounded.

* Organization of Peck's Brigade, Couch's Division, Keyes' Corps: Ninety-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel James M. M'Carter; Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel John F. Ballier; One Hundred and Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Thomas A. Rowley; Sixty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel John L. Riker; Fifty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel Regis De Trobriand

At the conclusion of the Peninsula campaign, the Fifty-fifth New York was transferred to another command, and the One Hundred and Thirty ninth Pennsylvania was added to it.

Williamsburg was occupied, and soon after, the march up the Peninsula was resumed, Keyes' Corps crossing the Chickahominy about the middle of May, and taking position a little in advance of Fair Oaks, which it proceeded to fortify. Soon after mid-day, on the 30th of May, the enemy having massed his forces in front of Casey's Division, struck a stunning blow, causing it to reel and finally yield ground. While the contest was raging before Casey's principal earth-work, Couch's Division, which was posted on the left, was hurried to the scene of action. Peck's Brigade was broken up, and while three of his regiments were sent to different parts of the field, the One Hundred and Second and the Ninety-third Pennsylvania, led by General Peck in person, were moved at double quick to the support of the right flank, where the enemy, in great force, was attacking. "These regiments," says General Peck in his official report, "came into line handsomely, pressed forward on the enemy, and contributed their best energies to sustain their comrades so gallantly contesting, inch by inch, the advancing foe. For about the space of half an hour our lines swayed forward and back, repeatedly, and at last, unable to withstand the pressure from successive reinforcements of the enemy, were compelled to fall back to the woods, across the main road."* The regiments subsequently retired to the second line of works, where they remained until the close of the action. Colonel Rowley, Captain John W. Patterson, Captain Thomas M'Laughlin, Adjutant Joseph Browne, and Lieutenant William B. Kenny were among the wounded, the latter mortally. The loss was thirteen killed and forty-eight wounded.

Returning to its former position, on the left of Seven Pines, it remained, engaged in guard and picket duty, until the notable change of base to the James. In the battle of Malvern Hill, the brigade, now commanded by General Howe, was on the right of the division line, the right of the brigade resting on a deep ravine, impassable for artillery and cavalry, but practicable for infantry, the edge of the ravine on the right being covered by a thin belt of wood. At a little before nine in the morning, the enemy opened with his artillery, and as Howe had no guns with which to answer, the troops were ordered to lie down. Soon his infantry came forward, under cover of the woods in front, in heavy force, and attacked upon the centre. As soon as his troops appeared within range, the men sprang to their feet and poured in a withering volley. Though largely outnumbered, the brigade kept an unbroken front and delivered a steady and most destructive fire, from the effects of which his line finally began to waver. At this juncture, the One Hundred and Second, which had been held in reserve, was, under command of Colonel Rowley, ordered forward for a charge. "Nobly and gallantly," says General Howe in his report, "did every man of the regiment respond to the order, and the impetuous dash of our men the enemy could not resist, but gave way, and were sent back much cut up and in disorder over the ground on which they advanced. This success gave us much advantage of position, by allowing the left centre of the brigade line to rest upon the woods, some eight hundred yards in advance of our first position, and at the same time affording us a cross fire upon any second attempt of the enemy upon our position."† The brigade was under fire for over twelve hours, and made a successful and heroic resistance to every attempt of the enemy to advance. Major John Poland and Lieutenant Thomas Mooney were among the killed. The loss was ten killed and thirty-seven wounded.

Upon the return of the army from the Peninsula the division was detached from the Fourth Corps, which was left at Fortress Monroe, and during the Bull Run and Maryland campaigns acted independently. The brigade was sent forward, soon after landing at Alexandria, in advance of the division, and met the retreating forces, from the Bull Run field, beyond Centreville, forming at intervals, as it retired, to check the pressure of the enemy. In the battle of Chantilly, on the evening of the 1st of September, the regiment acted as support to batteries, and did not become actively engaged. With little time for rest, the regiment crossed the Potomac, at Chain Bridge, and in the campaign, which speedily followed, in Maryland, moved with the division on the left flank of the army, along the Potomac, as far as Sandy Hook, whence it was hurried forward to the field of Antietam, and upon its arrival was held in reserve until the close of the battle. When the command of the army was transferred to Burnside the division was assigned to the Sixth Corps, which formed part of Franklin's Grand Division. In the battle of Fredericksburg, on the 13th of December, the corps was for the most part held in reserve near the banks of the river, and consequently the One Hundred and Second was not called into action beyond being under artillery fire. Colonel Rowley having been promoted to Brigadier General, Lieutenant Colonel Kinkead was promoted to Colonel, Major Patterson to Lieutenant Colonel, and Adjutant Joseph Browne to Major.

The campaign of Chancellorsville opened on the 27th of April, and on the morning of that day the regiment broke up winter-quarters and advanced to the neighborhood of Franklin's crossing, where it was held in waiting until the 2d of May. At nine o'clock in the evening it moved over the river, and at daybreak on the following morning arrived in front of the heights above Fredericksburg, where the enemy lay intrenched. The Sixty-second New York and One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania were thrown forward to feel his position and strength, but had not advanced more than two hundred yards when they were opened upon by a heavy musketry fire and from five pieces of artillery, in works not more than two hundred and fifty yards distant. They were compelled to fall back a few yards to where the slopes afforded some protection, which they held until the heights were taken. "The gallantry," says General Wheaton in his report, "with which this regiment (One Hundred and Second) and the Sixty-second New York moved up to receive the enemy's fire, and in about as many seconds lost, in killed and wounded, sixty-four officers and men, is worthy of special praise and notice." As soon as the heights were carried the brigade was hurried forward, and formed in two lines on the crest beyond the enemy's works, now abandoned, but had scarcely got into position when it was ordered to march in pursuit of the flying foe. At Salem Church, midway between Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, the enemy was found in great strength, Lee having sent back a heavy body from the Chancellorsville front to overpower and prevent the Sixth Corps from joining Hooker. The first division was engaged when the brigade arrived, the enemy occupying earth-works and rifle-pits in a timber on both sides of the road over which the corps was moving. As Wheaton came up, he was ordered by General Newton to take two regiments and go to the support of the troops engaged on the right of the road. The One Hundred and Second, under command of Major Browne, and a Rhode Island regiment were selected. Crossing a ravine just beyond the Morris House, he soon reached the ridge beyond, where he came suddenly under a terrific fire of musketry from a hidden foe. For an hour and a half the position was held and until the ammunition became nearly exhausted, when the troops upon his left gave way, giving free course to the enemy, who came pouring down the ravine which had just been crossed. A new line was accordingly formed, on which the troops were rallied as they came back, and the well directed fire of these two regiments checked his fiery charge, and caused him to recoil. Night coming on, the sound of battle gradually died away, but the enemy was still active and began to push by upon the left flank of the corps. The action opened early on the following morning, but only desultory fighting occurred, and at evening the brigade re-crossed the river, at Banks' Ford. The loss in the One Hundred and Second in this battle was twelve killed, fifty-five wounded, and one hundred missing.

The regiment retired to a camp four or five miles north of Falmouth, where it remained until the 8th of June. Upon the resignation of Colonel Kinkead, on the 27th of May, Major Patterson was promoted to Colonel, Captain William M'Ilwaine to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain Thomas M'Laughlin to Major. On the 8th, with the entire corps, it again crossed the Rappahannock, and was for several days kept hard at work fortifying. It was, however, soon after ascertained that the enemy, having moved up into the Shenandoah Valley, was making his way northward. To meet him, the army of the Potomac was put in motion, the First and Eleventh corps engaging him at Gettysburg on the 1st of July, the Sixth reaching the field on the afternoon of the 2d, after a long and wearisome march. Wheaton's Brigade was sent to the support of the Third and portions of the Second and Fifth corps, which had been desperately engaged, and took position, on commanding ground, to the right and front of Little Round Top, along a by-road, running parallel with the Taneytown Road, the position of the One Hundred and Second falling just in front of Weikert's House. At evening the brigade was withdrawn a short distance and its front made to conform to the new line of battle taken up during the night, and here it remained, with only slight loss, until the close of the struggle. The enemy, finding his efforts futile to break the Union lines, withdrew from the contest, and before he could again be brought to bay, escaped across the Potomac. After some delay the Union army followed, and the regiment joined in the pursuit, which was continued to the Rapidan, participated in the counter move to Centreville, again joined in the advance, taking part in the action at Rappahannock Station, crossed the Rappahannock and the Rapidan, and at Mine Run, after being temporarily transferred to General Warren's command, was marshalled, under the cold blasts of a December night, for a charge upon the enemy's entrenchments. The booming of the guns, which was to be the signal for the onset, was long and anxiously waited for, but before it came the order for the assault was countermanded, the blow meditated was withheld, and the army returned to the neighborhood of Brandy Station, where it went into winter-quarters.

Soon after being settled in camp the subject of re-enlistment was agitated, and to the lasting honor of the One Hundred and Second, it responded almost to a man, and became a veteran organization, being thereby entitled to a veteran furlough. This was joyfully accepted, and during its continuance a large number of recruits were obtained. The men who remained, together with the rest of the brigade, on the 30th of December, moved via Washington, by rail to Harper's Ferry, and thence marched to Halltown, where, during the winter, it was engaged in severe guard and picket duty, the country being infested with wandering bands of guerillas, unusually vigilant and active, with whom many of the inhabitants sympathized. About the middle of March, 1864, the brigade, the veterans in the meantime having re-joined it, returned to Brandy Station, where active preparations were in progress for the spring campaign. In the re-organization of the corps, the brigade was transferred from the Third to the Second Division. On the morning of the 4th of May the regiment moved from camp, and at noon of the 5th emerged upon the Wilderness battle-ground. Upon the Plank Road, near the point where General Meade afterwards established his headquarters, the Second Division separated from the rest of the corps, and while Sedgwick, with two divisions, moved off to the right, it advanced on the Plank, and after crossing to the Gordonsville Road, came suddenly upon a concealed foe, who poured into it a most withering fire. The line was immediately formed and a charge ordered, which was promptly made, and the woods in front were cleared. A position two hundred yards in advance of this was taken up and the enemy's coming awaited. At four in the afternoon, Hill's Corps, which had been hurried forward from Gordonsville, attacked in overwhelming numbers and with unwonted impetuosity. For two hours the battle raged with great violence, the slaughter being terrible, at the end of which the regiment was relieved and rested on its arms during the night, having lost, during the brief period of the fighting, sixteen killed and one hundred and twelve wounded. Colonel Patterson and Lieutenant Jacob Drum were among the killed, and Captain Thomas E. Kirkbride among the mortally wounded. Early on the following morning it again advanced to the attack and drove the enemy nearly two miles, but was itself in turn driven, and retired to the earth-works, where, at five in the evening, it was again attacked but easily repulsed repeated assaults. On this day it lost two killed and six wounded. Manœuvring for an advantage now commenced, in which the two armies were brought to Spottsylvania, where the struggle was renewed and continued, with little intermission, for nearly a week, when they again set forward towards Richmond. At Cold Harbor the fighting was very severe, the regiment losing, on the 3d of June, twenty-four wounded, and on the 5th fifteen wounded. Lieutenant Andrew J. M'Ilwaine was among the killed, and Lieutenant Colonel William M'Ilwaine among the mortally wounded.

On the 15th of June the regiment crossed the James, and upon its arrival in front of Petersburg again found the old foe, and commenced pushing him back and intrenching the ground gained. On the 18th a general advance was made, in which it lost one killed and twelve wounded. The slow operations of a siege now commenced and the regiment settled down in the trenches, where it was kept constantly employed, being under an almost constant fire day and night, the enemy's sharp-shooters being remarkably vigilant and active. On the 22d it moved over to the extreme left of the line and participated in the sharp fighting in which the movement resulted, and on the 29th marched to the relief of the cavalry, hemmed in by the enemy at a point upon the Weldon Railroad. On the 9th of July, the corps having been ordered to Washington, to meet the enemy advancing through Maryland and threatening the Capital, it marched to City Point, and embarking upon transports arrived in the city at the moment of greatest peril, the enemy being in the act of carrying the principal fortifications upon the north. He was repulsed with great slaughter, leaving three hundred of his killed and wounded upon the field. It joined in the pursuit, and for two months was kept almost constantly upon the march, the weather being intensely hot, and the troops suffering severely. At the expiration of his term of service, September 9th, Lieutenant Colonel M'Laughlin, in command of the regiment, was honorably discharged, and was succeeded by Major Coleman, whose commission bore date of August 2d.

On the 19th of September the army, now in the Shenandoah Valley, and General Sheridan in command, crossed the Opequan and advanced upon the enemy near Winchester. He was at first driven, but rallying he gained a decided advantage. At this juncture was felt the personal influence of the commander. Riding along the line he inspired all by his own heroic spirit, and at four in the afternoon the order to advance was given. With resistless power it swept onward, crushed and routed the enemy's forces and put them to inglorious flight. In this engagement the One Hundred and Second lost five killed and twenty-three wounded. Following up the retreating foe, who had taken refuge in the fastnesses of Fisher's Hill, Sheridan, leaping the mountain barriers, came in upon him, on front and flank, and again drove him in confusion, leaving his army little better than a disorganized rabble. In this engagement the regiment lost thirty-one wounded and three missing. Sheridan now retired to Cedar Creek, where he put his army in camp. General Early, who commanded the rebel army, having re-organized his command, and having received strong reinforcements, crept stealthily up to the Union front, and at a little before dawn on the 19th of October, under cover of a dense fog, broke in upon the Union encampment, and in the absence of the leader, routed the army and occupied the abandoned camps, capturing many guns and prisoners. Sheridan, who was at Winchester, by that ride of twenty miles made famous by the verse of Buchanan Reed, arrived upon the field in time to change the fortunes of the day, and about-facing his men and forming them for the decisive struggle, at four in the afternoon, sounded the charge. With determined valor the line moved on, swept the enemy back, re-possessed the lost camps, re-took the lost guns, and captured from the enemy the most of his, dealing him a blow from which he never afterwards recovered. In this battle the regiment lost seven killed and fifty-eight wounded. Major Coleman, who led the regiment, was among the killed.

In December the corps returned to the intrenchments before Petersburg, where it rested until the 25th of March, 1865. On the morning of that day the brigade was ordered to advance upon the enemy's works. He was found in full force and it was obliged to retire, suffering considerable loss, the regiment having one killed and twelve wounded. On the 2d of April the enemy began to move from his intrenchments, and the race for escape began. At Sailor's Creek, on the 6th, he found the Sixth Corps across his path, and sharp fighting ensued. On the 9th, at Appomattox Court House, finding all way of retreat cut off, he surrendered. The corps now moved rapidly to Danville to join Sherman. But the subsequent surrender of Johnston made further offensive movements unnecessary, and after a few weeks' delay the regiment returned to the neighborhood of Washington, where, on the 28th of June, it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in the counties of Armstrong, Allegheny, Butler, Clarion, and Indiana. Recruiting was commenced early in the fall of 1861, the men rendezvousing at Camp Orr, near the town of Kittanning. The Seventy-eighth Regiment had occupied this camp a little earlier, and had been recruited in the same locality. Those most eager to volunteer had thus been gathered in advance. As the cold weather came on, the government being unable to furnish adequate clothing and camp and garrison equipage, much suffering was experienced. To remedy this evil, an appeal was made to the congregation of the First Evangelical Lutheran Church of Pittsburg, and wagons were sent out throughout the surrounding country for aid, the response from both of these sources being prompt and generous. To hasten forward the work of recruiting, which was beginning to languish, privates were given a ten days' furlough, with the promise of another, provided they each brought in one or more men with them on their return. A hundred were thus furloughed at a time. So well did this plan succeed that in January, 1862, the regiment was reported for duty, with one company in excess of the number required, which was transferred to the Second Pennsylvania Cavalry. On the 24th of February it was ordered to Harrisburg, where a regimental organization was effected by the choice of the following field officers: Theodore F. Lehmann, Colonel; Wilson C. Maxwell, Lieutenant Colonel; Audley W. Gazzam, Major. It was soon afterwards ordered to Washington, where, upon its arrival, it was assigned to a provisional brigade* of General Casey's Division. With the corps the regiment proceeded to the Peninsula, and after remaining in camp a short time, near Hampton, moved forward and participated in the operations of the siege of Yorktown. The duty for a month was very severe, which, with exposure and the miasmatic influence of the climate, caused much sickness, and many died. When the enemy at length, finding his position no longer tenable, withdrew and retreated up the Peninsula, the regiment moved on with the corps in pursuit, and on the morning of the 5th of May, leading Keim's Brigade, arrived upon the battle-field opposite the enemy's forts at Williamsburg. Major Gazzam, who was in command, was directed to lead his regiment, by the left flank, along the Williamsburg Road, and reported to General Peck, at a point near the opening of the woods, op-

* Organization of Keim's Brigade, Casey's Division, Keyes' Corps: Eighty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Joshua B. posite the principal scene of action. It was immediately ordered into line, and became engaged, capturing one of the enemy's flags and maintaining its ground with gallantry. A part of the regiment, which had, by accident, become separated from the head of the column, was soon brought up. Under heavy fire the regiment was soon moved to the right of the road, into a thicket, where it was held as a reserve to that part of the line. At dusk it reported to General Devens, and was placed on picket for the night. Early on the following morning it was discovered that the enemy had fled, and Williamsburg was occupied.

Moving forward after the battle, Casey's Division, in advance of the army, crossed the Chickahominy and took position at Fair Oaks, which it was proceeding to fortify, when, on the 31st of May, it was suddenly attacked. A portion of the One Hundred and Third had been posted on the picket line on the previous day, and in the skirmishing which ensued had one killed and several wounded. As soon as it became evident that the enemy was present in force, the main body of the regiment was ordered forward, by General Casey, to the support of the pickets, and directed to report at a picket station to the right of the Richmond Road, where further orders would be received. On arriving at the designated point, Major Gazzam, failing to receive orders, posted his men in rear of the clearing, back of and to the right of the station, behind a ditch, partially filled with water, with the exception of companies B and G, which were directed to take position, under command of Captain George W. Gillespie, to the left of the road. Learning that the enemy's sharp-shooters were felling the trees in Gillespie's front, he ordered that officer to advance and clear them. This order was gallantly executed, and only when overpowered by numbers, and after having suffered severe loss, did Captain Gillespie fall back to the main line. While forming these companies on the left of his command, Major Gazzam was thrown from his horse and stunned by the falling of a tree crushed by a cannon ball. Recovering himself he re-gained his position in line, when a volley, from the enemy advancing in its front, was received and the flag staff severed. It was now discovered that the enemy was also advancing on the right. Lieutenant Schott was ordered to half-wheel his company and protect that flank; but the enemy was coming also on the left and was being reinforced in front. Seeing that with his small force unsupported, it was impossible to hold his ground longer, Major Gazzam gave the order to fall back slowly. Retiring through the woods, it came to a stand on a small cross-road and poured in a steady fire; but, in heavy force, the enemy continued to press forward, his battle-flags plainly visible on front and flank. To add to the horrors of its situation, the Union guns, posted in the earthworks, opened fire, and in seeking to get the range of the enemy, threw their shot and shell full upon its ranks, doing fearful execution. Major Gazzam, seeing that his men, between two fires, were fast falling, endeavored to lead back the remnant remaining, in order, but as fast as formed they were picked off, and yielding to a stern necessity, he was obliged to allow them to retire as best they could through the slashings. On reaching the line a portion of the men were rallied to dispute the enemy's passage to the right of the road, in front of the fortifications, and others joined the Ninety-second New York. Late in the day, those of the One Hundred and Third who were fit for duty were placed in rifle-pits, to the left of the road, where they remained until night-fall. The colors came near falling into the enemy's hands, the color guard being nearly all either killed or wounded. They were finally given to Captain M'Dowell, who brought them off the field. The loss in the engagement was eighty-four, killed and wounded. Among the killed were Captain George W. Gillespie and Lieutenant George D. Schott.

After the battle of Fair Oaks, keeping the left of the line of the army, the brigade was posted at White Oak Swamp, where it was immediately put to fortifying, and for a month, exposed to the heats of summer by day and the miasma of the swamp by night, without blankets and but half clothed, it was held to severe duty. Many fell sick, and so much was the command reduced that it was with difficulty, at times, that well men enough could be found to relieve the pickets. Captain M'Dowell and Lieutenant Crossen were so much reduced that they were sent to the rear, and both were obliged to resign on account of disability. Upon the death of General Keim, General W. H. Wessells succeeded to the command of the brigade, and General Casey was succeeded by General John J. Peck, in command of the division. The Seven Days' fight commenced on the extreme right of the army, and swinging, as upon a pivot, did not reach the extreme left, where the brigade lay, until the movement to the James was in full progress. During the 26th, 27th, and a part of the 28th it remained inactive. On the afternoon of the latter day the march commenced, and on the morning of the 1st of July it reached Malvern Hill. During the forenoon, the brigade having marched during the entire night preceding, was suffered to rest, the booming of artillery and rattle of small arms, in close proximity, telling of the progress of the fight. At two in the afternoon it was ordered up and posted to support artillery, which the enemy was intent on silencing. His fire for a time was very hot, but soon slackened, and at night, repulsed on every hand, he retired from the field.

During the following night the army commenced retiring to Harrison's Landing, Wessells' Brigade covering the retreat and repelling frequent attacks of rebel cavalry. On its arrival it went into camp, and on the 4th, was reviewed by the commanding General, who was received with enthusiastic cheers by all, save Casey's Division, which remained silent as he passed, having no heart to cheer the man who had most unjustly heaped reproaches upon it for its part in the battle of Fair Oaks. On the afternoon of the same day the One Hundred and Third, armed with axes, was marched out to the wood in front of the encampment, looking towards Malvern Hill, and set to felling the huge forest trees. Bred in the lumbering regions of the State, most of the men were familiar with the use of the axe, well attested,—

"As bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke."

A belt of a hundred yards was made along the whole front, and behind the abattis a breast-work was thrown up.

At the close of the Peninsula campaign the regiment had lost, by casualties and sickness, nearly half its original strength. When the army of M'Clellan was ordered to join Pope upon the Rapidan, Wessells' Brigade was included; but at the moment when it was about to depart, the order including it was countermanded, and it was directed to embark upon transports and proceed to Norfolk, whereby it was separated from the army of the Potomac, never again to re-join it. Upon its arrival there, it was hurried away by rail to Suffolk, in expectation of at once meeting the enemy. But learning that the Union forces had been strengthened, the latter deemed it prudent not to molest them. General Peck was placed in command of the district, and the men were kept busy in digging rifle-pits, throwing up earth-works, and making periodical expeditions to Franklin, an insignificant place occupied by the enemy, and commanding the only bridge left upon the Black Water. As winter approached, substantial quarters were built, and the condition of the men, now numbering about five hundred, was much improved.

On the 5th of December Wessells' Brigade was ordered to break camp, and marching to the Chowan River, proceeded by transports to Newbern, North Carolina, where it joined the forces under General Foster, then about to move on an expedition into the interior. With the exception of a slight skirmish at South-west Creek, little opposition was encountered on the march until the command reached Kingston, where the enemy was discovered occupying a strong position upon a little eminence, where stood a church, with a swamp in front thickly set with bushes and thorny vines, considered impassable. Several attempts were made to force the enemy's lines but without success, the One Hundred and Third, in the meantime, supporting a battery, and exposed to a heavy fire from his guns. Fruitless efforts had been made also to cross the swamp, which had attracted the attention of the enemy, and had caused him to direct a plunging fire of artillery upon it. At this juncture the One Hundred and Third was called out and directed to make one more attempt to force a passage through the swamp. Under the rapid fire of the enemy's guns the regiment dashed in, and wading through mud and water, and cutting the impenetrable thicket of vines, it pushed toilsomely through, as best it could, and in less than half an hour rallied on the opposite edge for a charge upon the rebel works. Without firing a gun it rushed forward, and the enemy, unprepared for an attack from that direction, was quickly routed. The Eighty-fifth came promptly to its support, and almost an entire rebel North Carolina regiment was taken prisoners. A general attack rapidly followed and the enemy was completely routed. As General Foster came up, at the conclusion of the battle, he said to Colonel Lehmann, "you have a noble regiment, sir!"

At the conclusion of this expedition the brigade returned to Newbern and went into barracks on the Neuse River. Here, with little to do, in pleasant quarters, with abundant rations, the time passed pleasantly. During the spring of 1863, frequent expeditions were made into the surrounding country, but little of moment was effected. On the 29th of March General Foster proceeded by steamer to Washington, on the Tar River, which the enemy was preparing to invest, for the purpose of directing its defence. Very soon after his arrival the town was surrounded, making escape from it very dangerous. On the 7th of April, a part of the forces at Newbern, under command of General Spinola, set out to relieve the garrison at Washington and open water communication by an attack in the rear. This force was unsuccessful in its purpose, and soon after returned. But on the night of the 16th, General Foster ran the gauntlet of rebel batteries at Rodman's Farm and Hill's Point, and arrived at Newbern in safety, though the steamer had thirty-two holes in her hull. Heading his troops in person, General Foster started on the following morning, and two days thereafter forced an entrance to Washington, and compelled the enemy to abandon the siege.

General Wessells was now assigned to the command of the district of the Albemarle, with headquarters at Plymouth, and the brigade at once removed thither. It now consisted of the One Hundred and Third and One Hundred and First Pennsylvania, and the Eighty-fifth, Ninety-second, and Ninety-sixth

New York, Colonel Lehmann being assigned to its command. A little later the latter regiment was taken away, and the Sixteenth Connecticut assigned to it. The work of fortifying the town was at once commenced. The wood surrounding it was cut away to a distance of twelve hundred yards, and alterations deemed necessary made in the works. The only avenue of supply was by water. To keep this open, one company from each regiment was sent to Roanoke Island, in Albemarle Sound, well provided with defensive works erected by the enemy at the opening of the rebellion, and which had been captured by General Burnside early in the year 1862. On account of the low grounds, extending for many miles around Plymouth, the continuation of the Great Dismal Swamp of Virginia, the avenues of approach by land were few, most of them next to impassable. These were all held by the enemy, and at Williamstown, some distance above on the Roanoke River, he had a considerable force, and two miles higher up, at Rainbow Bluff, had erected a fort, which commanded the river, and effectually prevented the Union gun-boats from ascending further. At Tarboro, within supporting distance, a division of the rebel army was posted, under General Pickett. The enemy had also been busy constructing a ram, the Albemarle, on the Upper Roanoke, with which he threatened the destruction of the fleet in front of Plymouth, and as a consequence the capture of the garrison. Frequent rumors had reached the headquarters of General Wessells of the readiness of the ram to move, accompanied by a powerful land force. The Union force at Plymouth at this time consisted of about seventeen hundred men of Wessells' Brigade, of whom at least six hundred were in hospital or sick in camp, one hundred and twenty men of the Twelfth New York Cavalry, two hundred men of the Fourth New York Battery, and one company of the Second Massachusetts Heavy Artillery. In March a deserter from the enemy, a carpenter who had worked on the Albemarle, reported the guns on board, and the craft prepared to sail. He also reported a large land force in readiness to make an attack upon Plymouth simultaneously with the attack of the ram on the fleet. This was reported to General Peck, in command of the department, and to General Butler, in command of the army, with a request for reinforcements; but the messages were lightly received, and no aid sent. On the 17th of April the land force and the ram were both reported in motion, and a troop of cavalry, sent out to reconnoitre, returned, confirming the report. At three o'clock in the afternoon an outer fort, about two miles above the main works, was attacked by the enemy's land force. This fort was held by a detachment of the Eighty-fifth New York, which made a stubborn defence, and the enemy was driven off. On the following morning the attack was renewed, the enemy determined to capture the work; but was again repulsed with great slaughter. During the succeeding night a redoubt, three-fourths of a mile in advance of the line of fortifications of Plymouth, was attacked, under cover of darkness, and fell into his hands, and its guns at daylight were turned upon Fort Williams, the main fort below. During the day these were silenced by the thirty-two pounders at Fort Williams. This work had been mainly constructed by company A, of the One Hundred and Third, under Captain Alexander, and was at this time occupied by that company, and a company of the Second Massachusetts Artillery. As yet the ram had not made its appearance, though it was reported to be lying five miles above on the river. Preparations had been made by the fort to give it a warm reception when it should make its appearance; but at two o'clock on the morning of the 19th, it succeeded in running past the fort without discovery, and escaped without receiving a shot. It immediately attacked the Southfield, a large steamer, which was sunk. Lieutenant Commander Flussser, of the Miami, was killed by the rebounding of a shell, which he had fired at the ram, and the gun-boat Bombshell was sunk at the wharf. The force in the fort was now exposed to attack by the land force from front and flank, and from the ram in rear. Immediately throwing up a breastwork, near the river, the garrison fought on the entire day, though against hope, as the place was being invested by a force of fifteen thousand men, under General Hoke.

Before daylight on Wednesday, the 20th, the enemy succeeded in working his way through the swamp below Plymouth, and proceeding along the river bank, protected by the ram, threw a large detachment into the town. The troops stationed on that side found themselves surrounded and assailed from a quarter in which they had anticipated protection from the gun-boats. They were compelled to fall back; but Colonel Lehmann, unaware of the force of the enemy occupying the town, taking the One Hundred and Third, which had held the centre at daylight, advanced with the design of re-taking it. He soon discovered his mistake, and returned to the fort. In the meantime, the Sixteenth Connecticut and One Hundred and First Pennsylvania had been compelled to surrender. The enemy, finding that the fort could not be carried by assault, opened with his artillery upon it, the shells falling at a fearful rate among the men, and his riflemen picking off the gunners. While the ammunition lasted the guns of the fort were able to keep the rebel artillery at bay; but that soon became exhausted. There was then but one alternative, and at eleven o'clock on the morning of the 20th of April, the remaining forces surrendered.

Of the One Hundred and Third Regiment there were at the time of the surrender about four hundred, rank and file, many of whom had been enlisted since the organization of the regiment. One company was on duty at Roanoke Island, and a few men absent, in hospital and on furlough. The officers were immediately separated from the men, not again to be united, the latter being sent to Andersonville, to starve and die by scores, the former to Macon, Georgia, and subsequently those of the highest grade, including Colonel Lehmann, to Charleston, where they were placed under fire of the powerful Union batteries, then engaged in bombarding the city. The wounded, of whom there were thirty-five, were left with the surgeon at Plymouth, in the hands of the enemy. Of the men who entered the Andersonville prison, one hundred and thirty-two died while in confinement.* Many died in the prisons to which they were subsequently removed, and while on their way to, and at Camp Parole, at Annapolis; and many more, after lingering sickness. When the regiment was mustered into the service there were seventy-two men upwards of six feet in height, of whom not one was present at the final muster out.

The officers of the regiment, after their release from confinement at Charleston, were paroled and returned to duty, Colonel Lehmann resuming command of the district of the Albemarle. The company which had not been included in the surrender, with the few men who were absent at the time, in all about eighty, were still on duty in the district and was known as the One Hundred and Third Regiment. In the months of March and April, 1865, eight new companies, fully organized and officered, were assigned to the regiment. But as some of the officers of all the original companies were on duty, these new companies, though serving as a part of the regiment, were reported as unassigned men. The command was finally mustered out of service, at Newbern, North Carolina, on the 25th of June, 1865, but eighty-one of the original men being then present.

* While in confinement, Charles Lane, Hospital Steward of the One Hundred and Third, made a faithful copy, from the records of the prison, of Pennsylvania soldiers who died at Andersonville from February 26, 1864, to March 24, 1865, which was transmitted to his Excellency, Governor Curtin, by Thomas C. Tripler, Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Thirty-ninth Missouri, and was published by Surgeon General Phillips, in 1865.

One Hundred and Fourth Regiment.*

On the 21st of August, 1861, W. W. H. Davis, a citizen of Doylestown, Bucks county, who had been a soldier in the Mexican war, and served as Captain in the Twenty-fifth Regiment, three months' service, received authority to recruit a regiment of infantry, and a six gun battery. Recruiting was immediately commenced, and a camp of rendezvous and instruction established near Doylestown. To hasten the work, public meetings were held, at one of which, at Addisville, six thousand persons were estimated to have been present, and addresses were made by William D. Kelly, Lewis C. Cassiday, Esq., Rev. Jacob Bellville, and George Lear, Esq. On the 6th of September the first company was mustered into service, and in the first week in November the regiment was reported for duty with eleven hundred and thirty-five officers and men. With the exception of one company, nearly the entire regiment was recruited in Bucks county. The following were the field officers: W. W. H. Davis, Colonel; John W. Neilds, Lieutenant Colonel; John M. Gries, Major. On the 21st of October, a silk flag, a present from patriotic ladies of Doylestown, and the State colors, were presented to the regiment, in the presence of a great concourse of citizens, by Governor Curtin. At the conclusion of the ceremony the Rev. Dr. Andrews presented, in behalf of the Bucks County Bible Society, to each officer and man a copy of the New Testament. Citizens freely contributed such articles as were necessary to the health and comfort of the men, among which was a well assorted field library, for the purchase of which Bishop Stevens contributed twenty-five dollars.

On the 6th of November the regiment was ordered to Washington, and soon after its arrival went into camp just back of Georgetown. It was here assigned to a provisional brigade, which was commanded by Colonel Davis. In December, the small-pox and typhoid fever broke out in camp, but owing to the strict sanitary measures enforced neither disease proved very virulent. Early in the winter, the regiment was placed in comfortable board barracks, built under the superintendence of Lieutenant Carver, and called Carver Barracks. They were subsequently taken for a hospital for the government, and were known as the Carver General Hospital. On the 18th of February, upon a call for ten men from each regiment for service upon gun-boats on the western rivers, that number was selected from a much larger number who volunteered. These men never returned to the command. Three of them were killed by the explosion of the boilers of the Mound City, while in action on the White River, and one other died of disease. On the 1st of March, the One Hundred and Fourth, Tidball's Battery, and a company of Rush's Lancers, all under command of Colonel Davis, were detailed as escort at the funeral of General Lander, which took place from the residence of Judge Chase. The weather during the winter was unfavorable to drill, but there was occasional target practice, and two or three times a week the officers recited in tactics, the field officers holding weekly meetings to recite, discuss, and explain movements of the line. As soon as the weather would permit brigade drill was commenced, and practiced regularly twice a day.

On the 29th of March, in obedience to orders the brigade broke camp, and embarking upon transports moved to Fortress Monroe. For several days it was encamped in a peach orchard near the ruins of the little village of Hampton. In the siege of Yorktown which soon opened, Keyes' Corps occupied the left of the line facing Lee's Mills, and Casey's Division, to which Davis' Brigade belonged, the centre of the corps. The regiment was at first encamped in an old tobacco field near Yorktown Four Corners, but subsequently removed to a grove of small pines on a dry sandy ridge. Fatigue and picket duty was very severe, a corduroy road to Cheeseman's Landing, needed for transportation of supplies, proving a work of great labor. In these duties the regiment was actively employed, bearing its full share of the burdens. On the 23d of April, Colonel Davis was relieved of the command of the brigade* by General Henry M. Naglee. On the 28th a reconnoissance was made by the brigade towards Lee's Mills, which showed that the enemy was still in force in front. A skirmisher of the Eleventh Maine was mortally wounded. When the siege works were completed, the heavy guns mounted, and all things nearly in readiness to open, the enemy, during the night of the 3d of May, quietly withdrew and retired up the Peninsula.

As it was uncertain what direction he had taken, Colonel Davis, with his own regiment, two pieces of artillery, and a squadron of regular cavalry, was ordered to make a reconnoissance towards Grove's Wharf, on the James. No traces of the enemy were found, and returning, Colonel Davis joined in the movement of the army up the Williamsburg Road. At the Yorktown Road, the troops of Heintzelman and Sumner blocked the way, and he was not permitted to advance. Late in the day he joined the division near Cheesecake Church, where it had gone into bivouac, being prevented from advancing further by the interposition of General Heintzelman. At noon on Monday word was brought that Hooker was hotly engaged, and in need of support. The brigade was immediately ordered forward, but before reaching the field, was met by a staff officer and ordered to return and hasten to the support of Hancock on the right. By some mistake the One Hundred and Fourth made a fatiguing march out of its way, and did not reach the position designed to be occupied until too late to be engaged.

By toilsome marches the brigade finally reached the neighborhood of the Chickahominy on the 19th of June. On the evening of that day, Colonel Davis with his own, and detachments of the Eleventh Maine, and Fifty-second Pennsylvania, was ordered to make a reconnoissance to Bottom's Bridge. The enemy was found occupying the opposite bank, and as Davis advanced fired the bridge. A spirited skirmish ensued in which artillery was freely used, and the sharp-shooters had opportunity to test their skill. The enemy's strength and position being developed, the command returned to camp, with the loss of one wounded. Again on the 21st, the regiment moved down with the corps near to the head of the bridge, and was about going into bivouac for the night, when Colonel Davis was ordered to march with his regiment immediately to the bridge. He was there met by General Keyes, who ordered him to cross and place his men on picket. Moving over in single file upon the stringers, the command was led about a mile up the Richmond Road, company B was thrown forward as pickets, and the rest divided and posted so as to command and enfilade the road where it debouched into the bottom. There was no alarm during the night, and in the morning it returned to camp. A permanent crossing having been effected, on the night of the 23d, General M'Clellan telegraphed orders for a reconnoissance towards Seven Pines. Naglee's Brigade was selected for this duty. The One Hundred and Fourth led the advance. Just beyond Savage Station the enemy was found in force, partly concealed in timber. The One Hundred and Fourth was formed on the left of the road, the Fifty-second Pennsylvania on the right, and skirmishers thrown forward. The skirmishers of the former regiment under Major Gries, companies A and F, rapidly advanced to clear the grain field, and some farm buildings in front, of rebel sharp-shooters. The crack of the rifles soon told that they were engaged, and the receding sound that they were driving the enemy. The artillery opened and the firing became spirited. At half past four the Union batteries were advanced, the enemy falling back, and Naglee was preparing to follow up his advantage, when he received orders to stay the pursuit lest it should bring on a general engagement. The loss in the regiment was one killed and four wounded. Corporal Thompson, of company D, was hit by a rifle ball and mortally wounded. Stepping out of the ranks he leaned his rifle against a tree, and said to his comrades, "Boys, I am done for, but you stand up to it." After suffering for eighteen months he died in hospital at Newbern, North Carolina.

On the 26th the reconnoissance towards Richmond was continued, the One Hundred and Fourth, with Davis' Riflemen of the Fifty-second, leading. The pickets were advanced to within five miles of the city, the regiment being stationed at the Fair Oaks Farm House. On the morning of the 29th it was moved over to the Nine Mile Road, a quarter of a mile further to the right, and Casey's entire division was brought up to Fair Oaks, Couch's Division occupying Casey's old ground at Seven Pines. As soon as Casey was in line he commenced fortifying on either side of the Williamsburg Road, and the troops were kept hard at work strengthening the position, down to the moment that they were attacked. General Naglee, with a strong detail, was engaged in building a bridge across the Chickahominy, opposite the place where General Sumner lay, at the time called Grapevine Bridge, subsequently known as Woodbury Bridge. Kearny's Division was stretched along the Richmond and York River Railroad, from the station back to the bridge across the river. Hooker's Division was posted on the edge of White Oak Swamp to watch the crossing.

At eleven o'clock on the morning of the 31st, the enemy in four grand divisions, commanded by Generals Hill, Huger, Longstreet, and Smith, all under the immediate command of General Johnston, having gained his position, fired three shells as a signal for the battle to begin, and an hour later he commenced driving in the Union pickets. Upon the first indication of a real attack, the One Hundred and Fourth was hurried to the support of Spratt's Battery, and was posted about a hundred yards in front of, and to the right of it, an unfortunate position, the battery being prevented from firing except in the direction directly in front, and the regiment being exposed to a concentrated fire. A volley from four hundred rifles, delivered upon the enemy in the woods in front, within easy range, marked the opening of the battle by the infantry, which soon became general along the entire line. A movement of the enemy upon the right, where the line of the regiment rested on the wood, being observed, companies A and B were pushed forward in that direction to meet and prevent it. The enemy soon came out into an open field bearing a white flag with a black square in the centre. This was at first mistaken for a flag of truce, but the fire, which for an instant slackened, was renewed, and he soon after unfurled his new national flag, a white cross with stars on a blue field. For an hour and a half the regiment had been under fire, and had heroically maintained its ground; but the enemy in increasing numbers now began to press upon front and flank, and it was apparent that unless help soon came it must be abandoned. Seeing that the battery must be lost if he yielded, Colonel Davis ordered a charge, hoping thereby to check the hot rebel advance. With a wild yell the men sprang forward at the word of command, and advanced a hundred yards over ground covered with low bushes. A worm fence which had not been observed was passed, and on reaching the cleared ground, a line was formed and a rapid and telling fire opened. This bold movement had the desired effect. The enemy, not knowing what force might be moving in support, was staggered and checked. The regiment was now fighting alone, in advance of the main line of battle, and it was evident that unless aid soon came it would be swallowed up by the forces of the enemy swarming around it. Lieutenant Ashenfelter was sent to General Casey for supports, which were promised. But none came, and finally, after having been over three hours in action, it was forced back by the overpowering numbers of the foe pushing forward. Both flags had been carried across the fence and planted in the ground upon the line. As the men went back one of these was left standing. Major Gries, and Sergeants Myers and Purcell sprang forward to rescue it, when the Major received his mortal wound; but the flag was saved and both brought off in safety. Company F was on picket when the battle opened, and when it became necessary for it to fall back, joined the Fifty-sixth New York, with which it did efficient service. Company E was also on picket between the Nine Mile Road and the railroad. In the progress of the fight it was flanked and completely cut off by a rebel brigade. Lieutenant Crowell and fifty-three men were captured. After retiring, the portion of the regiment remaining, was re-formed in the neighborhood of its camp, where the Twenty-third Pennsylvania was found in position, and with that regiment fought on until the close of the day. Near sundown the regiment, one hundred and fifty strong, arrived at the rifle-pits near the field hospital, a mile in rear of where the battle begun. The fighting was now over, and it was sent to the front to occupy a rifle-pit for the night. Its loss was ten officers and one hundred and sixty-six men killed and wounded, and sixty-one captured, an aggregate of two hundred and thirty-seven. Lieutenant E. Sayres M'Dowell was killed, and Colonel Davis, Major Gries, Captains Corcoran and Swartzlander, Lieutenant Ashenfelter, and Quartermaster Hendrie were wounded, Major Gries mortally. Chaplain Gries remained upon the field, and was zealous in his attentions to the wounded.

The fighting on the following morning was slight, and did not reach the position occupied by the One Hundred and Fourth. On the 4th of June the entire division was ordered back to the neighborhood of Bottom's Bridge, where the troops were immediately set to work repairing the bridge and throwing up earthworks for the protection of the river crossing. While here, Lieutenant Colonel Nields, who had been absent on account of disability from sun-stroke, returned and assumed command, relieving Captain Rogers. On the 17th of June, immediately after the raid of Stuart in rear of the army, in which that bold rider reached Tunstall's Station, the regiment crossed the river and was posted near Dispatch Station, one company being kept constantly on guard. On the 27th was fought the battle of Gaines' Mill, a few miles above, the company on picket being able to hear distinctly the rattle of musketry. Towards evening the stragglers from the field began to arrive, and by dark the roads were crowded. With the assistance of a picket detachment of the Eighth Cavalry, the stragglers were halted, and on the following morning to the number of fifteen hundred, were conducted to Savage Station, and turned over to the commanding officer. On the afternoon of the 27th, the regiment was employed in loading stores upon a train, which was sent to Savage Station, and on the following morning, crossed at Bottom's Bridge.

The retreat of the army to the James had now commenced. It was necessary that the crossings of the Chickahominy should be held until the trains and the heavy columns of the army could get well on their way. The enemy was now in heavy force upon the left bank, clamorous to get over. For the defence of the lower bridges, Naglee's Brigade, with Miller's, Brady's, and Morgan's batteries, was selected. Temporary defensive works were hastily constructed. Companies C and I were stationed in a rifle-pit covering the bridge, and the remaining companies of the regiment in reserve as a support to Morgan's Battery. Early on the 28th the enemy approached, his infantry manœuvring as if to force a crossing, and his artillery opening from a point within less than a thousand yards. His guns were, however, soon silenced by our batteries, and his infantry driven back to the timber in the rear. On the 29th large bodies of the enemy made their appearance, but were kept at bay by the admirable dispositions made to receive them. In the meantime having forced and repaired the upper bridges, he had crossed, and was giving battle at Allen's Farm and Savage Station. Finally at seven o'clock in the afternoon of the 29th, a train loaded with powder and fixed ammunition was fired and run at full speed towards the river, the bridge across which having previously been destroyed. As it went over the embankment it exploded with a fearful crash, and the brigade was quickly withdrawn. The One Hundred and Fourth was ordered to bring up the rear.

At White Oak Creek crossing the brigade was again drawn up to dispute the passage, and was attached to General Smith's Division of Franklin's Corps. Scarcely had the engineers destroyed the bridge, when the enemy arrived and posting powerful batteries in a commanding position on the left bank, opened a heavy cannonade which was answered as warmly, and the duel was kept up with effect until dark. Soon after nightfall Franklin silently withdrew, leaving Naglee's Brigade and two pieces of artillery, which were ordered to follow at ten o'clock. A part of the brigade, consisting of the One Hundred and Fourth, Fifty-second, and a part of the One Hundredth New York, not receiving the order, were left at the swamp, and until two o'clock on the following morning kept up a slow fire from the battery. It was then discovered that the command had been left by mistake, and, under the lead of Colonel Van Wyck, of the Fifty-sixth New York, the column moved off to Malvern Hill. Here Keyes' Corps occupied the right of the line, which curved back and rested on the river. It was in reserve during the engagement, and was not called into action. From Malvern Hill the army retired to Harrison's Landing, the One Hundred and Fourth arriving on the morning of the 3d.

The first morning report after reaching the Landing showed twenty officers, and four hundred and thirty-three men present. On the 31st of July Colonel Davis, though not entirely recovered from his wounds received at Fair Oaks, re-joined the regiment, and resumed command. Lieutenant Colonel Neild had resigned a few days before on account of disability. Adjutant Thompson D. Hart was promoted to succeed him, and Captain Rogers to be Major.

When M'Clellan's army was ordered to evacuate the Peninsula, Peck's Division of Keyes' Corps, was detached and ordered to remain. Naglee's Brigade, now under command of General Emory, was left at Yorktown. Colonel Davis with his own, the One Hundredth New York, and Mink's Battery of four three-inch rifled guns was sent to occupy Gloucester Point. The fort at this place, which had been built by the enemy, was a regular pentagon, and very large, being a mile around by the exterior slope. It occupied nearly the site of the old revolutionary works erected by the British in 1781. The troops were immediately put to work repairing it, and for three months were kept busily employed. With the exception of an occasional reconnoissance, little of importance occurred to disturb the quiet and comfort of the camp. Fish and oysters were abundant, the quarters were pleasantly located, and the climate salubrious. On the 26th of September, the prisoners captured at Fair Oaks, forty-seven in number, returned to the regiment, and a month later sixteen recruits were received. In an encounter, at a little past midnight of the 16th of November, with the enemy's cavalry near Hook's Store, by Lieutenant Markley with seven men, scouts from a party of two companies dispatched to intercept him, one of the party was killed and three were wounded. The enemy then charged upon and captured the remaining three men, and rode off in the direction of Richmond. Hook's Store was ordered to be burned, and mills in the neighborhood of the disaster were taken possession of for the use of the government. Presuming that the command would occupy this camp during the winter, wood was cut and brought inside the fort, and quarters built in the most substantial manner.

But in this hope it was disappointed. On the 28th of December the brigade, now numbering four thousand three hundred and thirty-eight officers and men, sailed from Fortress Monroe with sealed orders, which on being opened off the cape, showed its destination to be Beaufort, North Carolina. After a brief stay here, during which General Naglee was placed in command of a division of the Eighteenth Corps, and Colonel Davis of the brigade, the corps was transferred to Hilton Head, South Carolina, designed to act, in conjunction with the forces already there, against Charleston. Before leaving Beaufort Harbor, a battalion of sharp-shooters was organized from the brigade, two officers, twelve sergeants and corporals, and fifty privates being detailed from each regiment. Captain Groff and Lieutenant Hibbs were detailed from the One Hundred and Fourth. As the naval force was not in readiness to commence operations against the city when the troops arrived, they were placed in camp on Saint Helena Island. On the 5th of April, 1863, three divisions of infantry were embarked for a co-operative movement against Charleston, and moved up to Edisto Island; but before Heckman's Division, to which the One Hundred and Fourth belonged, had debarked, the attack by the fleet was at an end, and the land forces returned for the most part to their previous encampments, Davis' Brigade being sent to Beaufort. The camp of the regiment was here delightfully located, and, with the exception of occasional detachments sent out upon the neighboring islands to intercept straggling parties of the enemy, and to guard against their incursions, the command was not actively employed. Upon the expiration of the term of service of the militia regiments in the division, two companies of the One Hundred and Fourth, C and H, under Captain W. W. Marple, were ordered to duty in battery Taylor, and company B, under Captain Kephart, in battery Brayton, in place of the departing troops.

On the 12th of June General Gilmore arrived at Hilton Head, and assumed command of the department, relieving General Hunter. He at once visited Folly Island, contiguous to Morris Island, on which troops had been retained since the first attack on Charleston, and determined to operate against Sumter from powerful batteries to be erected on these islands. Work was commenced on the north end of Folly Island on the 15th of June, and by the 3d of July the fortifications were completed. At three o'clock on the morning of the 6th, the One Hundred and Fourth, and Fifty-second, with ten days' rations, moved in light marching order by transport to Folly Island, where the land forces were concentrating. The main attack, which had been fixed for the 10th, was to be made upon Morris Island, from the batteries which had been constructed on Folly Island, and which had been kept masked from the enemy. For a diversion in favor of this attack, a detachment was sent to James Island to demonstrate upon the approaches to Charleston by way of Secessionville. This force, of which Davis' Brigade formed part, was placed under command of General Alfred H. Terry. On the afternoon of the 9th, Davis moved up and at dark commenced debarkation. When all were ashore the command was formed and moved forward, the One Hundred and Fourth in advance, the object being to seize and hold the bridge at the head of the causeway, which was the only avenue by which the interior of the island could be reached. The bridge was possessed without opposition, but in posting his pickets, Captain Groff aroused a rebel party who fired a volley upon the bridge, on which were General Terry, Colonel Davis, and Major Rogers, which was replied to, but the fire soon subsided without assault. When it was light enough to discern objects, the command advanced. Soon the sound of the heavy guns of Gilmore, in the attack on Morris Island, were heard, and before night it was announced that he had been successful and was in possession of the southern part of the island, the demonstration of Terry having answered well its purpose, causing the enemy to divide his forces, and to believe that the latter was the main attack.

To clear James Island of the Union forces, which required him to keep his own forces divided, the enemy came out on the morning of the 16th in heavy columns, with the design of cutting off and capturing Terry's command. Approaching unperceived upon the left of the line, he opened with his batteries upon the gun-boat Pawnee in the hope of crippling her and holding the way of retreat. At the same time he attacked with spirit the pickets of the Union right. The Pawnee was aground, and for nearly an hour was at the mercy of the enemy, but fortunately was not injured. In the meantime the troops were hastily formed, Stevenson's Brigade and the Fifty-fourth Massachusetts in front, Davis with the Second South Carolina in the second line, and opened fire. Finally the Pawnee was enabled to swing around and deliver her broadsides, and fortunately during the night the John Adams had come up a creek on the Union right, and at the critical moment poured in rapid rounds from her thirty-pounder Parrott. The enemy was repulsed, and retreated rapidly up the island leaving some of his dead and wounded on the field.

But the department had no men to lose in operations of doubtful utility or success, and it was decided to withdraw from James Island. With much fatigue this was accomplished, and the division returned to Folly Island where Davis' Brigade was left, Stevenson's and Montgomery's being transferred on the following day to Morris Island. By the withdrawal of troops for the assault on Fort Wagner, which was made on the 18th, Colonel Davis was left, with about two thousand troops, in command on Folly Island. The failure to take Wagner by assault rendered a siege necessary, and the work was immediately begun. The troops on Folly Island, in addition to guarding the approaches, furnished fire-wood for the troops in the trenches, and supplied the engineers with all the timber necessary to construct batteries, magazines, stockades, and for other purposes. On the 3d of August the first detail was made from the brigade for duty in the trenches, which consisted of four hundred and seventy-five men under a field officer, and from that time forward, while the siege lasted, heavy details for duty in the trenches, and for guard and fatigue duty, were furnished in addition to the large amount of labor performed on Folly Island.

"On the evening of the 22d of August," says Colonel Davis in his history of the regiment,* "I was ordered with my whole brigade to Morris Island, with two days' cooked rations, for a tour of that length in the trenches. * * * The troops went upon duty just at dark. Entering the trenches at the first parallel, they passed along them by the flank to the extreme front, where the engineers were at work, men being sent into all the intermediate parallels and batteries as they went up. In some places the trenches were deep enough to afford protection when walking upright, while in other parts they had to stoop to get cover. Up to the second parallel there were splinter-proofs to protect the men from the fragments of bursting shells, but above that there was only the usual trench. Every few minutes a shell from James Island or Wagner, or the ball of a sharp-shooter, came in close proximity, when there would be an involuntary seeking of cover. The officers and men lay in their trenches and slight splinter-proofs for twenty-four hours, when they were relieved by a new detail." On the 29th of August the entire brigade was transferred to Morris Island. On the 31st, a Lieutenant and forty men were required for fatigue duty with the engineers on the advance trenches. Lieutenant Laughlin led the detail from the One Hundred and Fourth, which was composed of volunteers from companies A and C, and of these one was killed and six wounded. On the following day the regiment was required to take the place of one of the three chosen regiments to occupy the advance trenches. During the tour of duty it had one killed and five wounded.

Details were furnished from the One Hundred and Fourth for duty in the boat infantry, which was employed in patrolling the creeks and rivers, and the waters adjacent to the islands now occupied by the Union troops. The enemy employed similar troops, and between them were frequent collisions. Details were also made to man and take charge of Requa batteries, used in connection with the boat infantry. These batteries consisted of twenty-five rifle gun barrels mounted on a pintle in the stern of the boat, provided with metallic cartridges, and so arranged that they could all be discharged by a single cap. The whole could thus be discharged twelve times a minute, and were effective at close range.

The fifth and last parallel had finally been completed, and preparations were made for another assault upon Fort Wagner. The troops selected for this duty were Stevenson's and Davis' Brigades, and the Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania and Third New Hampshire regiments, in all about three thousand men, the two latter regiments to form a storming party. Remembering the fate of those who had made the previous assault, the men went about their preparations for it with the full consciousness that their return alive was involved in much doubt. They wrote letters to their friends at home; they left valuables with their comrades with instructions for their disposition, and nerved themselves to meet the worst heroically. At the appointed hour they entered the works and made their way to the front; but as they passed along, the rumor spread that the fort had been evacuated. A volunteer sent out to verify the report, soon returned declaring the enemy's works abandoned, and three thousand heavy hearts beat light again.

No sooner was Morris Island in possession of the Union forces, than the work was commenced of putting it in a complete state of defence. The One Hundred and Fourth participated in this arduous and dangerous work. Portions of companies D and F were at the front on the night of the 21st of September, and while there, off duty, and asleep in the bomb-proof at battery Gregg, a shell from James Island entered and burst among them. Seven men were wounded, two mortally. On the 17th of November the batteries for heavy guns were so far completed that five were opened upon the city of Charleston. From this time forward during the winter and spring, the firing was continued with tolerable regularity. On the 2d of December a detachment of thirty-five drafted men was received into the regiment. Of the original members of the command one hundred and ten re-enlisted for a second term of three years. On the 16th of January, 1864, two hundred and eighty-nine more recruits were received. From January 17th, to April 20th, Colonel Davis was in command of all the troops on Morris Island, Lieutenant Colonel Hart holding command of the brigade, and Captains Harvey and Corcoran of the regiment.

About the middle of April the Tenth Corps was ordered to Fortress Monroe, to reinforce the Army of the James, and on the 26th Colonel Davis was placed in command of the Middle District of South Carolina, extending along the coast from Saint Helena Sound to the mouth of the Savannah River. The

One Hundred and Fourth and Fifty-second of his brigade were left with him. The regiment remained on duty here, the companies at times widely scattered, until near the close of June, when General Foster received instructions to attack Charleston with all his disposable force. This movement was ordered for the double purpose of diverting the attention of the enemy from Sherman, who was marching on Atlanta, and to prevent the sending of reinforcements to Lee at Richmond. The attack was to be made by four separate columns. The One Hundred and Fourth embarked on the morning of the 1st of July and ran up to North Edisto, where it landed and moved with the column of General Hatch, which consisted of Saxton's and Davis' brigades. While on the march Surgeon Robinson mistook his way, and becoming separated from the command, fell into the hands of the enemy. On the morning of the 6th, while out upon the front reconnoitring, Colonel Davis was wounded by the fragment of a shell, losing the fingers of his right hand. At four o'clock on the morning of the 9th, the enemy attacked with great determination and drove in the pickets. He rushed on towards the bridge with reckless impetuosity. When within one hundred yards the artillery, which he had not discovered, opened with grape and canister with terrible effect. His advance was checked, but immediately deploying in the wood on either side of the road, commenced a general attack. The action lasted two hours, when he retired repulsed at all points. The loss in the regiment in the operations upon the island was one officer, Lieutenant Philip Burke killed, and two officers and nine men wounded. Lieutenant Burke was on duty on the picket line, and being observed on account of his activity in rallying his men, a rebel sharp-shooter mounted a bank opposite and taking deliberate aim shot him through the head. That night the island was evacuated, and the forces were all recalled, the attempt to capture Charleston resulting, as all previous ones had, in failure.

The regiment now returned to its old camp at Hilton Head, where it was engaged in garrison and fatigue duty. Towards the close of July it was ordered to Florida, and was posted for guard along the line of railroad from Jacksonville to Baldwin, where it remained about a month, when with other regiments it was sent north. It landed at Alexandria, Virginia, and was assigned to duty in the fortifications on the south side of the Potomac, where it remained until its term of enlistment expired. Preparatory to the muster out, the veterans and recruits were organized in a battalion of five companies under command of Lieutenant Colonel Hart. The rest of the regiment left Washington on the 23d of September and arrived at Philadelphia on the 25th, where it was quartered at the Volunteer Refreshment Saloon. On the 27th the city authorities gave it a formal reception, when it paraded on the principal streets, and on the 30th it was mustered out of service.

The battalion under Colonel Hart, moved from Washington to Harper's Ferry, whence, with the brigade of Colonel Heine, it was dispatched to escort a train of six hundred wagons to Sheridan's Army at Harrisonburg. As the army fell back towards Winchester, Heine's Brigade guarded the pass through the mountains near Front Royal. It was subsequently detached and placed in charge of a train destined for Martinsburg. While at the latter place loading the train, occurred the battle of Cedar Mountain, the roar of the artillery being distinctly heard. A detachment which had come up after the train had left, in number about equal to a company, participated in the battle under Captain Kephart, having five wounded. About the first of November a brigade, of which Hart's Battalion formed part, was ordered to Philadelphia, where it remained until after the general election. It then returned to Winchester, where, soon after its arrival Lieutenant Colonel Hart was mustered out, his term having expired, and Captain Kephart, who was afterwards promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, took command.

On the 22d of November, Heine's Brigade was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac, and was stationed on its arrival on the Bermuda front on the centre of the line between the Appomattox and the James. Here it remained during the winter, and participated in the dangers and hardships incident to the siege. Early in the spring of 1865, five new companies were added, bringing the battalion up to the full strength of a regiment, of which Lieutenant Colonel Kephart was commissioned Colonel, Captain J. M'Donald Laughlin, Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain T. B. Scarborough, Major. In the assault upon the works in front of Petersburg, on the 3d and 4th of April, the regiment participated, and upon the rout of the rebel army, followed in pursuit as far as Chesterfield Station. From this point it returned to Petersburg, where it remained on duty until the 20th of April, when it was ordered to Fortress Monroe, and, after a halt of four days, to Norfolk. Here it was attached to the command of General Gordon, and was engaged in guarding the forts and harbor-prison, and in provost duty in the town. Subsequently Colonel Kephart, with a part of his regiment, was ordered to duty at Portsmouth, where on the 25th of August it was finally mustered out. During the last year of its service, by a system of economy in the management of the bakery of the regiment, there had accumulated a fund of nearly two thousand dollars. Before leaving Washington, in September, 1864, to return home and receive their discharge, by a vote of the enlisted men, to whom the fund belonged, and by the consent of the Secretary of War, a council of administration, of whom Colonel Davis was at the head, was authorized to appropriate sixteen hundred dollars of this fund for the erection of a monument to the memory of those who had fallen. This monument * has since been erected in the public square at Doylestown, and was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on the 30th of May, 1868, on which occasion Major General William H. Emory delivered a commemorative address.

* "The design is chaste and beautiful, with sufficient ornamentation to make it attractive. The proportions are as nearly as may be to those of Cleopatra's Needle. Its height is thirty-four feet from the ground. The base is nine feet square at the surface, and six feet at the height of three feet. The first block above the base is Maine Granite, six feet square and two feet thick, and weighs twelve thousand pounds. All above this is American White marble. The shaft is nineteen feet long, in one block. The inscription is brief. On the obverse of the die is a large bronze shield with raised figures in gilt,

On the reverse is the date,

1867.

On the west front,

Their good swords rust,
And their steeds are dust,
But their souls are with the saints, we trust.

On the east front is the following inscription:

To the memory of the officers and men of the 104th Pennsylvania Regiment who fell in the late war.

On the shaft is cut the names of battles in which the regiment participated, running around it from top to bottom, like a wreath, beginning with Yorktown and ending with Richmond, Virginia."—Newspaper.

One Hundred and Fifth Regiment.

EARLY in August, 1861, Amor A. M'Knight, a citizen of Brookville, who had for some time previous commanded a militia company, and who, during the three months' service, had led a company in the Eighth Regiment, received the requisite authority to raise a regiment for three years. Recruiting was immediately commenced, many re-enlisting from the returning regiments, and by the close of the month its ranks were full. The men were principally from the Congressional District popularly known as the Wild Cat District, embracing the counties of Jefferson, which was most largely represented, Clarion, and Clearfield, were well formed and stalwart, and inured to hardships and privations in their struggles to subdue the forests. A regimental organization was effected by the choice of the following field officers: Amor A. M'Knight, Colonel; W. W. Corbett, Lieutenant Colonel; M. M. Dick, Major. Early in October the regiment was ordered to the front, and breaking camp at Pittsburg, where it had rendezvoused, it proceeded to Washington and encamped on Kalorama Heights, and subsequently at Camp Jameson, about a mile south of Alexandria. It was here assigned to Jameson's Brigade,* of Heintzelman's Division, and was carefully and rigidly drilled. To the diligent study of elementary principles by the officers, and to the zeal displayed by them in training their men, is in a great measure due the reliability and steadiness which characterized this regiment in the hour of battle. During the winter considerable sickness prevailed, and some died.

The regiment broke camp and moved with the army on the spring campaign, and on the 17th of March proceeded by transport to Fortress Monroe. During the siege of Yorktown, which was immediately opened, it was engaged in fatigue duty upon the works, and in guard and picket duty, suffering much from sickness caused by severe toil and privation, and by the unhealthy location of its camp. After the quiet evacuation of the enemy's works, which occurred on the night of the 3d of May, it joined in the pursuit, and after a most exhausting march all day at double quick through deep mud and in drenching rain, arrived under fire on the battle ground at Williamsburg, where it lay until morning, when it advanced as skirmishers and planted the national standard upon his principal fort.

Having moved up and crossed the Chickahominy, it was posted with the * Organization of Jameson's Brigade, the First, Heintzelman's afterwards Kearny's Division, the First, Heintzelman's Corps, the Third: Fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Charles T. Campbell; Sixty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Alexander Hays; Eighty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, Colonel Stephen A. Dodge; One Hundred and Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Amor A. M'Knight.

corps of Heintzelman and Casey covering the roads leading towards Richmond and the White Oak Swamp, where, on the 31st of May, the enemy attacked. Kearny's Division being on the extreme left, was not ordered into action until the battle had been raging for some time on the right, in front of Fair Oaks, where Couch and Casey stood. "I had disposed of all my command," says General Jameson, "at different points, with the exception of three hundred and forty-eight men of the One Hundred and Fifth Pennsylvania, under Colonel M'Knight. All our men had fled from the abattis in the vicinity of the Richmond Road. Our only alternative was to make the best stand possible with the handful of men under Colonel M'Knight. We led them across the open field and up the Richmond Road into the abattis, at a double quick, and under a most terrific fire, deploying one-half on either side of the road. For more than an hour and a half this small force held every inch of ground. At last the enemy broke and ran, and M'Knight pursued them through Casey's old camp. During the time that M'Knight was engaged on the Richmond Road, our line had been gradually giving way about a quarter of a mile to his right. Just as M'Knight succeeded in routing the force in his front, our line gave way entirely at the point above indicated, and the rebel force came pouring into the Richmond Road directly in his rear, and while the gallant M'Knight was pursuing the South Carolina chivalry towards Richmond, the rebel forces directly in his rear were pursuing a portion of our forces towards the Chickahominy. I then received orders to withdraw my men if possible. With great difficulty they succeeded in filing off to the left in the woods towards White Oak Swamp, retreating along the edge of the swamp back to our second line of defences." When the regiment went into action company G was on guard at the bridge in the rear, and companies C and I were away on fatigue duty. On being relieved these companies hastened forward, but unable to join the rest of the command were ordered by General Heintzelman to form on the right of the Fifty-seventh Pennsylvania, and with that regiment did excellent service. The regiment lost forty-one killed, one hundred and fifty wounded, and seventeen missing. Among the killed was Captain John C. Dowling, and Lieutenant John P. R. Cummiskey, and of the wounded Colonel M'Knight, Captains Duff, Thompson, Kirk, and Greenawalt, and Lieutenants S. A. Craig, Markle, Shipley, Geggie, and Baird. Headley, in mentioning this regiment in the battle, says, "Napoleon's veterans never stood firmer under a devastating fire."*

For nearly a month succeeding the battle of Fair Oaks the regiment was employed in fortifying and in picket duty, where the enemy's sharp-shooters were unusually vigilant. At ten o'clock on the evening of June 25th, while the regimeat was deployed on the picket line, it was attacked, and in the slight engagement which ensued it lost two killed and six wounded. After the battles of Mechanicsville and Gaines' Mill, fought on the 26th and 27th, the army fell back across the Chickahominy, and commenced the retreat to the James. Jameson's Brigade, now commanded by Robinson, moved early on the morning of the 28th. After proceeding about a mile it was halted and occupied the second line of defence, which it held until three in the afternoon, when it moved with Birney's Division to Savage Station. Falling back about two miles further it again formed in line of battle, where it remained until the following morning, and then moved on to White Oak Swamp. The enemy pressing hard upon the left of the line, Robinson's Brigade was ordered back three miles to its support. After returning and crossing the creek, it was on the afternoon of the 30th held in line of battle at Charles City Cross Roads, where from two P. M. until dark it was sharply engaged, the enemy making frequent attempts to capture the battery which it supported. The loss was fifty-six killed and wounded. At night it retired to Malvern Hill, where it was in line during the battle on the following day, and under a heavy artillery fire, but not closely engaged. On the 25th of July Colonel M'Knight, prostrated by disease which threatened his life, resigned, and in the absence of Lieutenant Colonel Corbett, the command devolved on Captain Calvin A. Craig. So wasted was the regiment by sickness and by battle that upon its arrival at Harrison's Landing it scarcely numbered one hundred rank and file.

Upon the return of the army at the close of the Peninsula Campaign, the One Hundred and Fifth was landed at Alexandria and was assigned, to duty in guarding the railroad between Manassas and Warrenton Junction, companies E, H, and K being posted at Bristoe Station, and B, and G at the Junction. On the evening of August 26th, a train from the station four miles above, arrived at the Junction, reporting that it had been fired into by a band of five hundred of the enemy's cavalry. The only force then at the Junction was that of the two companies named, barely seventy-five men, thirty-five men of the Eighty-seventh New York, and Lieutenant James' Battery of four or five guns. Dispositions were immediately made of this small force to meet the threatened danger. At midnight the enemy was discovered advancing in the darkness, and when within a few rods of the line a rapid fire was opened from infantry and artillery. The enemy replied and for a time a lively fire was kept up; but not expecting to meet artillery his fire soon slackened and he retired out of range. Quickly re-forming he again charged, yelling hideously, and delivering a destructive fire upon the handful of men that was opposing him. The little band held out heroically until surrounded, when it was forced to surrender. On the following day they were paroled. Company B had three men killed. Captain S. A. Craig, in command of the detachment, was severely wounded. Companies H, E, and K, at Bristoe Station, had been relieved and were on the point of taking the cars for head-quarters at Centerville, but hearing the noise of the fray at the Junction, returned to their post. They succeeded in reaching head-quarters at daylight on the following morning, and were the first to report the presence of the enemy. Company H, which was the last relieved, fell into the hands of the enemy. As soon as advised of his presence, the First Division, together with Hooker's, changed front to the rear to face him. At Bristoe they found him in force and a spirited engagement ensued, in which the portion of the regiment in column supported a battery, and rendered efficient service. The regiment lay upon its arms until ten o'clock that night, but heard nothing more of the enemy until it came up with him on the following day on the old Bull Run battle ground. Colonel Poe, with Berry's Brigade, was posted in the first line, with Robinson's Brigade on his right, partly in line and partly in support. Early in the afternoon Robinson's Brigade was sent diagonally to the front to relieve the centre, posted in woods. He drove forward several hundred yards, but the centre of the main body being shortly after driven back and out of the woods, exposed in front of all others, and both flanks in air, he was obliged to halt and confine his efforts to holding his own. In the fighting on the following morning Kearny's Division did not take part, though it lost men by an enfilading fire of the enemy's batteries, the One Hundred and Fifth unfortunately being placed in an exposed position, which for hours, under the most deadly fire, it firmly maintained. At five P. M. the left and centre suddenly gave way, and Kearny massed his troops as directed by General Pope, but soon re-occupied with Birney's Brigade, supported by Robinson's, a very advanced block of woods, which was held until ten at night. Soon after sun-down the One Hundred and Fifth was relieved from supporting a battery, and placed upon the picket line, where it remained until eleven, when it fell back and marched to Centreville. Here it lay until the evening of the 31st, when it again moved three miles towards Fairfax Court House, to the neighborhood of Chantilly. At this juncture General Kearny passed and was enthusiastically cheered—the last cheer which the regiment ever gave him, as a few minutes after he was killed. In his report of the battle of Bull Run, made on the same day, he said, "The One Hundred and Fifth Pennsylvania volunteers were not wanting. They are Pennsylvanians—mountain men—again have they been fearfully decimated. The desperate charge of these regiments sustains the past history of this division."* Of the small number who entered the battle thirteen were killed and forty-one wounded. Lieutenant John L. Gilbert was among the killed. Lieutenant Colonel Craig had his horse shot under him, and was wounded in the ankle. Captains Hastings, Kirk, and Thompson, and Lieutenants Neil, and Clyde were among the wounded.

At the close of Pope's campaign the division was ordered into the defences of Washington, where it remained until after the battle of Antietam. Lieutenant Colonel Corbett was, on the 29th of July, commissioned Colonel, but on the 10th of September resigned, and was honorably discharged. In the meantime Colonel M'Knight having returned, was, on the 20th of September, recommissioned Colonel. On the morning of the 28th of October, the regiment was sent to White's Ford, where it crossed the Potomac and proceeded to the Ball's Bluff battle ground. For several days it was engaged in scouting in the neighborhood of Leesburg and Millville. At the latter place a large flouring mill, the property of a rebel, was taken possession of and run for the use of the Union troops. With the army it advanced to the Rappahannock, and on the 24th of November arrived at Falmouth.

General Burnside, who had succeeded M'Clellan in command of the army, was now preparing to move on the enemy, securely posted upon the heights overlooking Fredericksburg. On the morning of December 11th, the One Hundred and Fifth moved from camp in brigade line to the crest of the hill overlooking the river, and a mile in rear of the batteries, where it rested until dark, when it moved down to the wood in front of the hill, and bivouacked for the night. At four P. M. of the following day it continued on down the stream passing general head-quarters, and again bivouacked for the night. At daylight on the following morning the march was resumed, and at two P. M. it crossed on Franklin's pontoons. It was immediately moved at double quick to that part of the field where the Pennsylvania Reserves were hotly engaged, and was posted by order of General Robinson in rear of Randolph's Battery. Here it remained until dusk. It was then moved in front of the battery, and here, in close proximity to the enemy's sharp-shooters animated with unusual activity and vigilance, it lay hugging closely the ground for thirty-six hours. At seven A. M. of the 15th, it was relieved by the Ninety-ninth Pennsylvania, and with other regiments of the brigade retired to a line two hundred yards back and parallel with the first. At night it re-crossed the river and moved back to the camp which it had left. "During Saturday afternoon," says Colonel M'Knight in his official report, "the regiment was subjected to an almost uninterrupted fire of artillery, accompanied at times by discharges of musketry, all of which, from our position, had to be endured, without even the pleasure or excitement of sending a shot in return." Captain James Hamilton, Lieutenants George Patterson, and William J. Clyde, and eleven men, were wounded, two of whom afterwards died of their wounds.

Until the 20th of January, 1863, the regiment remained in camp employed in the usual round of duty. On that day it broke camp and moved with the brigade five miles back towards Warrenton, when it turned abruptly to the left and marched directly for the river, bivouacking at night a mile from the stream. This brigade had been selected for forcing a passage, and holding the thither bank while the pontoons were being laid. But before a crossing was effected, the army, when all in motion, was suddenly arrested by the breaking up of the roads. The movement was abandoned, and the army, with all its trains, with infinite labor, returned to camp.

With the advance of General Hooker to the chief command came re-organization and frequent inspections and reviews. On the 26th of March the division was reviewed by Governor Curtin, and on the 10th of April by President Lincoln and General Hooker. On the 28th of April the Third Corps, now commanded by Sickles, started on the Chancellorsville Campaign. It first moved down to a point four miles below Fredericksburg, as if to follow the Sixth Corps which had already crossed the Rappahannock at Franklin's crossing of the preceding December. But on the afternoon of the 30th it about faced and marched away to United States Ford, which it crossed, and followed where Hooker with three corps of his army had already gone before. At five o'clock in the afternoon the regiment was formed in line of battle near the Chancellor Brick Mansion. It was hardly in position when the enemy attacked, and it was for some time exposed to a heavy artillery fire. At daylight on the morning of the 2d, the brigade was moved to the centre of the line, where the regiment was deployed as skirmishers. In the afternoon, a movement of the enemy in heavy force along the front and to the right having been discovered, it was sent forward with the division on a reconnoissance, in which Jackson's Corps was struck in flank. At nine in the evening it returned, and lay during the night in rear of batteries a mile south of the Orange Plank Road, a part of the division, in the meantime, making its famous midnight attack for the recovery of the works lost by the Eleventh Corps. At daylight on the morning of Sunday the 3d, the regiment moved out a short distance, and was employed in constructing a corduroy road across low swampy ground for the movement of artillery. Scarcely was it finished when the command received a sweeping fire of musketry, by which several in the regiment were wounded. The brigade was immediately moved to the rear of the batteries at the Brick Mansion, and re-formed, the regiment holding the extreme left with the One Hundred and Fourteenth on its right. A charge was ordered, and with well dressed lines it dashed forward into the woods in front of the batteries, meeting a terrific fire of musketry as it went. In making this advance, Colonel M'Knight, heroically leading, was shot through the head and instantly killed. Stung to madness by the loss of their Colonel, stricken down before their eyes, his men, now led by Lieutenant Colonel Craig, rushed on, though losing heavily at every step, and quickly drove the foe from his first line of works. Discovering that a movement was being made to outflank the regiment on the left, company B was ordered out beyond the breast-works to meet it. This order was promptly obeyed, and the enemy's advance checked, the company gaining a position where it did fearful execution. For nearly two hours did this gallant brigade hold the ground which it had wrenched from the enemy, and which he vainly struggled to recover. Finally, having been largely reinforced, he was able to outflank it on the right, when it was forced to retire again to the rear of the batteries. Replenishing its ammunition, which had now become exhausted, it again advanced into the woods near the Orange Road, and was alternately engaged in the entrenchments and in the rear of the abattis. On the following morning the brigade was relieved and the regiment retired to the third line, where, until the close of the battle, it remained executing important movements. At three A. M. on the morning of the 5th it re-crossed the river, and returned to its camp near Falmouth. The regiment went into action with twenty-seven officers and three hundred and twenty men. Of these, three officers and eight enlisted men were killed, five officers and sixty men wounded, and seven missing, an aggregate of seventy-seven. In addition to Colonel M'Knight, Captain Robert Kirk and Lieutenant Charles H. Powers were killed, and Captain Clyde, and Lieutenants Shipley, Platt, Hewitt, and M'Henry were wounded. At a meeting of officers of the brigade, held shortly after the battle, resolutions of respect and condolence for Colonel M'Knight and directing the usual badge of mourning, were passed. Lieutenant Colonel Craig was promoted to such him, Major J. W. Greenawalt being promoted to Lieutenant Colonel, and Captain L. B. Duff, to Major. On the 27th the Kearny badge of honor was presented by General Sickles to those non-commissioned officers and privates who had especially distinguished themselves.*

On the 2d of June the regiment was sent for picket duty to Banks' Ford, where unusual vigilance was required, as balloons were being daily sent up to watch the movements of the enemy, which he seemed especially intent upon capturing. It being evident that the enemy was moving northward, the Third Corps, on the 11th, commenced a corresponding movement, and after hard

*The following are the names of those who received the Kearny Badge: A. H. Mitchell, S. T. Hadden, and A. D. M'Pherson, of company A; Joseph C. Kelso, George Heiges, and Charles S. M'Cauley, of company B; A. A. Harley, Charles C. Weaver, and Samuel H. Mays, of company C; James Silvis, and Milton Craven, of company D; Joseph E. Geiger, George Weddle, and James M. Shoaf, of company E; Robert Doty, Henry M'Killip, and Perry C. Cupler, of company F; George W. Hawthorne, and William D. Kane, of company G; Thomas M. Rea, and Robert Feverly, of company H; Oliver C. Reddick, and Joseph Kinnier, of company I; James Miller, and George H. Reed, of company K. The honor seems to have been well bestowed, for of this number, Miller afterwards rose to be Colonel of the regiment, Reddick to Lieutenant Colonel, Mitchell and Kelso to Captains, Silvis, Shoaf, M'Killip, and Hadden to Lieutenants; Hadden, M'Cauley, Doty, Hawthorne, and Kinnier were killed; Heiges died of wounds; M'Pherson lost a leg at Gettysburg, Craven his right arm at the Wilderness, and each of the others received one or more wounds in the many battles in which they afterwards participated.

marches under a burning sun, reached Emmittsburg, Maryland, on the 30th. Here at two P. M. on the 1st of July, the regiment was ordered to move rapidly to Gettysburg, where a battle had already opened. By a forced march it reached the left of the field a little after dark. At daylight of July 2d it moved out to the right of the road leading to Round Top, and at a little before noon was led to the front, companies A, C, D, F, and I being deployed as skirmishers to support the Sixty-third, which had been thrown forward and had opened a brisk fire upon the enemy's skirmishers, now plainly visible in their immediate front. Sergeant Doty was shot through the head while these companies were resting in support, though not permitted to open fire. At a little after noon these companies were called in and the regiment took its position in line on the extreme right of the brigade, where it remained quiet until three P. M., when the battle opened in earnest, and the line was moved up to the brow of the hill, along the Emmittsburg Pike. For an hour, under a heavy fire of shot and shell, from front and flank, it held its position unflinching, suffering considerable loss. At this juncture the enemy's infantry came on in heavy force and the command rose up to meet it, forming in the road. The fighting was now desperate, the brigade holding its ground and the enemy gradually advancing. Finally the line upon its left was broken through, and the rebels came pouring in upon its flank and rear, compelling it to fall back. In good order, re-forming at short intervals and at every favorable point, keeping up all the while a deliberate fire, it withdrew, and at evening took position on the line connecting the Cemetery Ridge with Round Top, where it remained until the close of the battle. Of two hundred and forty-seven who went into the fight, one officer and fourteen men were killed, thirteen officers and one hundred and eleven men wounded, and nine missing, an aggregate of one hundred and sixty-eight, more than half its entire strength. Lieutenant George W. Crossly was killed, and Colonel Craig, Lieutenant Colonel Greenawalt, Captains Clyde, Woodward, Consor, and M'Henry, and Lieutenants Barr, Hewitt, Dunsten, Patterson, Dougherty, Van Vliet, and Boyington were wounded, fourteen officers out of the seventeen who stood with the regiment when the battle opened. Lieutenant James A. Dunsten subsequently died of his wounds. Colonel Craig had two horses shot under him. In a letter written soon after the engagement Colonel Craig said, "The One Hundred and Fifth never fought so well as at Gettysburg. We rallied some eight or ten times after the rest of the brigade had left us, and the boys fought like demons. Their battle-cry was Pennsylvania. I could handle them just as well on that field of battle as though they had simply been on drill. This is a state of perfection in discipline that is gained by but few regiments."

After the battle of Gettysburg the regiment returned to Virginia, and on the 28th of August was in camp at Warrenton, having marched almost constantly for forty-eight days. On the 9th of October it was in position near Thoroughfare Mountain, where an attack was anticipated, lying in line of battle all night. Retiring to Sulphur Springs it rested for a night, and then set forward, the rebel cavalry hanging on its flank, greatly annoying it, and retarding its progress. After crossing the Rappahannock at Freeman's Ford, and advancing a short distance, it was suddenly re-called, it having been discovered that the enemy was turning the right flank of the army. Remaining at the Ford until the 12th, it commenced a retrograde march towards Washington. The regiment had the advance of the entire corps, which was on the left flank facing Washington, and was deployed as skirmishers on the left flank of the column. The enemy was moving in the same direction on a parallel road, and his column was frequently in sight. At Auburn a heavy skirmish occurred, in which the regiment was hotly engaged, losing one killed and five wounded. At Fairfax Station, the One Hundred and Fifth was assigned to provost duty, Colonel Craig holding command of the post.

After remaining here a few days the advance was again sounded, and the regiment was sent to the front, where it was kept at the post of danger and responsibility. On the 27th of October it was slightly engaged at Kelly's Ford, but sustained no loss. A month later it was in the battle at Locust Grove, and for an hour and a half was under a heavy fire. Fortunately its loss here was only seven wounded, the enemy for the most part firing over the heads of the men. At the close of the Mine Run campaign it returned with the army and went into winter-quarters at its old camp at Brandy Station. On the 28th of December two hundred and forty men, nearly the entire strength of the regiment, re-enlisted and were given a veteran furlough. While away about fifty recruits were obtained.

Upon its return to camp preparations were in progress for the spring campaign, and on the 4th of May it marched with the division for the Wilderness, crossing the Rapidan at Ely's Ford, and passing on the way the old Chancellorsville battle ground. Early on the morning of the 5th the division was aroused and commenced the march towards Spottsylvania, but was halted and countermarched, the enemy having come up and attacked in the Wilderness. On arriving where the battle was raging, it was immediately hurried into the fight, the One Hundred and Fifth forming line of battle on the plank road, and advancing a mile through dense undergrowth. Here it formed in rear of the Sixty-third Pennsylvania, occupying the front line. At four P. M. it relieved the Sixty-third, and as it advanced to the front found the ground strewn with the dead and the dying. It was soon in the thickest of the fray, and men were dropping on every hand like grain before the sickle of the reaper. Here Captain James Hamilton was killed, and Colonel Craig and Lieutenant Colonel Greenawalt wounded, the latter mortally. The command now devolved on Major Duff. Until long after dark the position was held despite the furious assaults made to carry it. It was finally relieved and led to the rear. On the morning of the 6th the battle was renewed, and the regiment advanced in line with the Sixty-third, until it reached the front line hotly engaged and lying flat upon the ground. The order was given to charge, and the brigade, passing the prostrate troops, with loud cheers, dashed on. The rebels, confused by this unexpected assault, gave way, and were pursued nearly two miles. Here they were reinforced, and taking advantage of the somewhat disordered state of the Union line flushed with its success, delivered a counter charge, and in turn drove our men back to a line of temporary breast-works, most of the advantage gained being lost. Here fresh cartridges were supplied, just in time to receive the enemy as he came on in great force. Three successive attempts were made to carry the position, but without success, and he finally retired, having suffered great loss in his heroic but vain assaults. During the entire day the line swayed backward and forward with the shifting fortunes of the battle, and the dense forest which was the scene of contention was covered with the dead and dying of both armies. The aggregate loss in the two days of battle was eight officers and one hundred and sixty-two men killed and wounded. Captain William J. Clyde was among the killed.

On Saturday, the 7th, there was brisk skirmishing but not a general engagement. In the afternoon the division advanced over the disputed ground, the regiment just on the left of the road on which it had fought during the two preceding days. When two miles out, it came suddenly upon a masked battery which opened with grape and canister. As the regiments were marching in close column by division and not in position for fighting, it fell back to the breast-works which it had left, where it remained until after dark, and then started in the direction of the Rapidan. This was interpreted by the men as a retreat, and all through the ranks was heard cries of "Another Failure." But it had not proceeded far when it commenced a movement to the left, and the morning of the following day found it again faced towards Richmond. During the two following days the regiment was held in reserve. On the morning of the 10th the Second Corps lay south of the Po River, while the remainder of the army was on its left to the north of it. As the battle opened the Second Corps, with the exception of one division, was withdrawn to the north bank and was moved to parts of the line hardest pressed. The One Hundred and Fifth was at one time marched alone, along a ridge only a short distance from the enemy's works. His artillery, which was in position, opened upon it. The first two shells fell close, but exploded without doing any injury. The third struck private Enos Shirts, exploding upon the instant, blowing him to pieces. Lieutenant Reddick was wounded by a fragment of the shell, and a number were sprinkled with the flesh and blood of their fallen comrade, the splinters of his bones penetrating their clothing.

On the night of the 11th, after a day of drenching rain, the regiment marched to the left, where it remained in the mud until near morning, when, with the corps, it moved cautiously through the wooded space in front, and at early dawn charged the rebel works. The astonished foe were scarcely aroused from their sleep when they found their first line of works suddenly snatched from their hands. Five thousand prisoners with artillery and small arms graced the triumph. A part of his second line was captured, and in face of his most desperate assaults to re-take it, was held.

As the army moved forward on the 18th, Ewell came in upon the rear and attacked the train. The One Hundred and Fifth with other troops returned for its defence, and remained in line of battle during the night, but the train had already been relieved by fresh forces coming up from the rear. On the 23d the regiment arrived in front of the enemy's works at the North Anna. A charge was immediately ordered, and forming in a thick wood, advanced, led by Major Duff, without firing a gun. The enemy fled at its approach, and on reaching the open field his works were found deserted.

Fighting, fortifying, and flanking, the army about the middle of June crossed the James and commenced operations in front of Petersburg. The regiment charged with the brigade on the enemy's works, losing two killed and four wounded, Major Levi B. Duff, in command, was among the severely wounded, losing a leg. On the following day a portion of the enemy's line was captured, the regiment losing one killed in the fight. On the 21st it moved with the brigade in the direction of the Weldon Railroad, where, on the following day, breast-works were thrown up; but the enemy gaining the flank of the position, compelled its abandonment. In this movement two enlisted men were killed and two missing. On the 26th of July the regiment participated in the movement across the James, for a diversion in favor of the assault to be made after the explosion of the Mine, and returned in time to be in position for any advantage that should be gained thereby. In the operations of the day, 30th of July, two men were wounded. On the 14th of August the brigade was detached from the corps, and again sent across the James to the assistance of the Tenth Corps. On the following day the regiment was under fire and lost six men wounded. On the morning of the 16th the brigade, in command of Colonel Craig, was posted in line on the right of the Tenth Corps, the right of the regiment connecting with the First Maine dismounted cavalry. When the enemy's works were stormed the brigade was formed in front of, and at right angles to them, the left resting on a part of his line which had been previously captured by troops of the Tenth Corps. At the signal to advance the brigade moved gallantly forward, capturing two officers and seventy-five men. Suffering from an enfilading fire it was, however, forced to fall back, having lost severely. Colonel Craig, while in command of the brigade, and leading in the charge, was mortally wounded and died the following morning. The loss in the regiment was four killed and sixteen wounded, Captain Barr being of the latter.

After the engagement the division returned to its place in the corps on the Petersburg front. On the 5th of September one hundred and sixty-two enlisted men and one officer of the Sixty-third, whose terms of service had not expired, were assigned to the regiment. On the 1st of October it participated in the movement upon the Weldon Railroad, remaining until the 6th, when it returned to camp, and turning in the Springfield rifled muskets with which it had been armed, was supplied with Spencer Repeaters. Again on the 26th of October it moved out to the Weldon Railroad, and thence towards the South Side Railroad, skirmishing in front on the forenoon of the 27th. In the afternoon it advanced into a thick wood connecting on the right with cavalry. In this position it attacked, the fighting being for a half hour very sharp. At the end of this time the cavalry gave way, letting the enemy in upon its flank and rear, compelling it to fall hastily back. Captain John C. Consor in command of the regiment, and Charles E. Patton, the two senior officers, and four enlisted men were killed, eighteen men wounded and forty missing—captured when forced to fall back, some of them afterwards escaping and returning to the ranks. The colors were lost, but in a manner reflecting no dishonor upon the surviving men.

Upon its return, the regiment was posted in the front line in Fort Davis, next to Fort Hell. Early in December it re-joined the division and participated in the raid upon the Weldon Railroad, assisting to destroy the road for a considerable distance. Upon its return it went into winter-quarters, and was engaged in drill and fatigue duty. On the 24th of March, 1865, there were assigned to the regiment one hundred and twenty-two recruits, and four days later one hundred and seventy more. On the 27th the regiment, Major Miller in command, moved with the division and was ordered to charge the enemy's skirmishers, which was successfully accomplished, driving them into his main line of works. The loss was one man killed and five wounded. At Hatcher's Run, two days later, one hundred and fifty men under Captain Reddick were sent forward to develop the strength and position of the enemy in his fort in front. Reddick advanced to within sixty yards of the work, where he was met by a storm of missiles from artillery and small arms. His purpose having been accomplished he retired, losing only one killed and two wounded, the ground in front being of such a nature as fortunately to render the enemy's aim inaccurate. In the operations of the 6th of April, at Sailor's Creek, the regiment was actively engaged, Colonel Miller having his horse killed under him, capturing many prisoners and arms. On the 9th the rebel army under Lee surrendered, and the regiment on the 11th commenced the march from Clover Hill, where it was encamped, for Washington, passing through Richmond on its way. Arriving at Bailey's Cross Roads, five miles above Alexandria, it went into camp, where it remained until the close of its term. On the 23d of June it marched in the grand review at the Capital, and on the 11th of July was mustered out of service. A singular fatality seemed to attend the officers of the regiment. Two Colonels, two Lieutenant Colonels, one Major, five Captains, and five Lieutenants were killed in action or died of their wounds, while several others were crippled and disabled for life, attesting the hard service to which it was exposed. At the final muster out not a single officer, and but a handful of the men, who originally marched with the regiment, remained.
